UNIFORM PREMARITAL AND MARITAL AGREEMENTS ACT

Prefatory Note

The purpose of this act is to bring clarity and consistency across a range of agreements between spouses and those who are about to become spouses. The focus is on agreements that purport to modify or waive rights that would otherwise arise at the time of the dissolution of the marriage or the death of one of the spouses.

Forty years ago, state courts generally refused to enforce premarital agreements that altered the parties’ right at divorce, on the basis that they were attempts to alter the terms of a status, marriage, or because they had the effect of encouraging divorce (at least for the party who would have to pay less in alimony or give up less in the division of property). Over the course of the 1970s and 1980s, nearly every state changed its law to allow at least some divorce-focused premarital agreements to be enforced, though the standards for regulating those agreements varied greatly from state to state. The law relating to premarital agreements affecting the parties’ rights at the death of a spouse had historically been less hostile than the treatment of such agreements affecting the right of the parties at divorce. The ability of a wife to waive her dower rights goes back to the 16th century Statute of Uses. 227 Hen. VIII, c. IO, § 6 (1535). Other countries have also moved towards greater legal recognition of premarital agreements and marital agreements, though there remains a great diversity of approaches internationally. See Jens M. Scherpe (ed.), Marital Agreements and Private Autonomy in Comparative Perspective (Hart Publishing, 2012); see also Katharina Boele-Woelki, Jo Miles and Jens M. Scherpe (eds.), The Future of Family Property in Europe (Intersentia, 2011).

The Uniform Premarital Agreement Act was promulgated in 1983. Since then it has been adopted by twenty-six jurisdictions, with roughly half of those jurisdictions making significant amendments to the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, either at the time of enactment or at a later date. See Amberlynn Curry, Comment, “The Uniform Premarital Agreement Act and Its Variations throughout the States,” 23 Journal of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers 355 (2010). Over the years, commentators have offered a variety of criticisms of that Act, mostly arguing that it was weighted too strongly in favor of enforcement, and was insufficiently protective of vulnerable parties. E.g., Barbara Ann Atwood, “Ten Years Later: Lingering Concerns About the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act,” 19 Journal of Legislation 127 (1993); Gail Frommer Brod, “Premarital Agreements and Gender Justice,” 9 Yale Journal of Law & Feminism 229 (1994); J. Thomas Oldham, “With All My Worldly Goods I Thee Endow, or Maybe Not: A Reevaluation of the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act After Three Decades,” 19 Duke Journal of Gender and the Law 83 (2011). Whatever its faults, the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act has brought some consistency to the legal treatment of premarital agreements, especially as concerns rights at dissolution of marriage.

However, the situation regarding agreements waiving rights at the death of the other spouse and the legal treatment of marital agreements have been far less settled and consistent. Some states have neither case-law nor legislation, while the remaining states have created a wide range of approaches. Additionally, relating to waiver of rights at the death of the other spouse, the Uniform Probate Code, Section 2-213; Restatement (Third) of Property, Section 9.4
(2003); Model Marital Property Act, Section 10 (1983); and Internal Revenue Code, Sections 401 and 417 (stating when a surviving spouse’s waiver of rights to a qualified plan would be valid) all seem to impose somewhat different standards and requirements. Regarding marital agreements, some states have neither case law nor legislation, while the remaining states have created a wide range of approaches.

The general approach of this act is that parties should be free, within broad limits, to choose the financial terms of their marriage. The limits are those of due process in formation, on the one hand, and certain minimal standards of support at the point of enforcement, on the other. Because a significant minority of states authorize some form of fairness review based on the parties’ circumstances at the time the agreement is to be enforced, a bracketed provision in section 9(c) offers the option of refusing enforcement based on a finding of undue hardship at the time of enforcement. And because some states put the burden of proof on the party seeking enforcement of some or all of these sorts of agreements, a legislative note after section 9 offers alternative language to reflect that burden of proof.

This act chooses to treat premarital agreements and marital agreements under the same set of principles and requirements. A number of states currently treat premarital agreements and marital agreements under different legal standards, with higher burdens on those who wish to enforce marital agreements. See, e.g., Sean Hannon Williams, “Postnuptial Agreements,” 2007 Wisconsin Law Review 827, 838-845; Brian H. Bix, “The ALI Principles and Agreements: Seeking a Balance Between Status and Contract,” in Reconceiving the Family: Critical Reflections on the American Law Institute’s Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution (Robin Fretwell Wilson, ed., Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006), pp. 372-391, at 382-387; Barbara A. Atwood, "Marital Contracts and the Meaning of Marriage," 54 Arizona Law Review 1 (2012). However, this act follows the American Law Institute, in its Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution (2002), in treating the two types of agreements under the same set of standards. While this act, like the American Law Institute’s Principles before it, recognizes that different sorts of risks may predominate in the different transaction types – risks of unfairness based on bounded rationality and changed circumstances for premarital agreements and risks of duress and undue influence for marital agreements (Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution, Section 7.01, comment e) – this act shares the American Law Institute’s view that the resources available through the act and common law principles would be sufficient to deal with the likely problems with either type of transaction.
UNIFORM PREMARITAL AND MARITAL AGREEMENTS ACT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This [act] may be cited as the Uniform Premarital and Marital Agreements Act.

SECTION 2. DEFINITIONS. In this [act]:

(1) “Amendment” means a modification or revocation of a premarital agreement or marital agreement.

(2) “Marital agreement” means an agreement between spouses who intend to remain married which affirms, modifies, or waives a marital rights or obligations during the marriage or at separation, marital dissolution, death of one of the spouses, or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any other event. The term includes an amendment signed after the parties marry, of a premarital agreement or an amendment of a prior marital agreement.

(3) “Marital dissolution” means the ending of a marriage by court decree. The term includes a divorce, dissolution, and annulment.

(4) “Marital right or obligation” means any of the following rights and obligations arising between spouses because of their marital status:

(Aa) spousal support;

(Bb) rights to property, including characterization, management, and ownership;

(Ce) responsibility for liabilities;

(Dd) rights to property and responsibility for liabilities at separation, marital dissolution, or death of a spouse; or

(Ee) allocation and award of attorney's fees and costs.
(5) “Premarital agreement” means an agreement between individuals intending to marry which affirms, modifies, or waives marital rights or obligations during the marriage or at separation, marital dissolution, death of one of the spouses, or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any other event. The term includes an amendment, signed before the parties' marriage of a prior premarital agreement.

(6) “Property” means anything that may be the subject of ownership, whether real or personal, or legal or equitable, or any interest therein.

(7) “Record” means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(8) “Separation” means a de facto or court-decreed separation of spouses which does not terminate the marriage.

(9) “Sign” means with present intent to authenticate or adopt a record:

(A) to execute or adopt a tangible symbol; or

(B) to attach to or logically associate with the record an electronic symbol, sound, or process.

(10) “State” means a state of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, or any territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Legislative Note: The extent to which this act applies to officially recognized nonmarital relationships, such as civil unions and domestic partnerships, is a matter for state law other than this act. Consider whether these definitions need to be amended.

Comment

Through the definitions of premarital agreement and marital agreement, the drafting committee hopes to clarify that this act is not intended to cover cohabitation agreements, separation agreements, or conventional day-to-day commercial transactions between spouses. Marital agreements and separation agreements are usually distinguished based on whether the couple at the time of the agreement intend for their marriage to continue or whether legal-a court-decree separation, indefinite permanent physical separation or dissolution of the marriage, is planned or imminent. To avoid deception of the other party or the court regarding intentions, some one jurisdictions refuses to enforce a marital agreement if it is quickly followed by an action for legal separation or dissolution of the marriage. See, e.g., Minnesota Statutes § 519.11, subd. 1a(d)(marital agreement presumed to be unenforceable if separation or dissolution sought within two years; in such a case, enforcement is allowed only if the spouse seeking enforcement proves that the agreement was fair and equitable).

While most premarital agreements and marital agreements will be stand-alone documents, A text can constitute a premarital agreement or marital agreement even if it is only a fragment of a writing that deals primarily with other topics could also constitute a premarital agreement or marital agreement for the purpose of this act.

With premarital agreements, the nature and timing of the agreement (between parties who are about to marry) reduces the danger that the act’s language will accidentally include types of transactions that are not thought of as premarital agreements and should not be treated as premarital agreements (but see the discussion of Mahr agreements, below). There is a greater concern with marital agreements, since (a) spouses enter many otherwise enforceable financial transactions, most of which are not problematic and should not be made subject to special procedural or substantive constraints; and (b) there are significant questions about how to deal with agreements whose primary intention may not be to waive one spouse’s rights at dissolution of the marriage or the other spouse’s death, but where the agreement nonetheless has that effect.
In the terms of another uniform act, the drafting committee’s purpose is to exclude from coverage “acts and events that have significance apart from their effect” upon rights at dissolution of the marriage or at the death of one of the spouses. See Uniform Probate Code, Section 2-512 (“Events of Independent Significance”). Such transactions might include (but are not limited to) the creation of joint and several liability through real estate mortgages, motor vehicle financing agreements, joint lines of credit, overdraft protection, loan guaranties, joint income tax returns, creation of joint property ownership with a right of survivorship, joint property with payment on death provisions or transfer on death provisions, durable power of attorney or medical power of attorney, buy-sell agreements, agreements regarding the valuation of property, the placing of marital property into an irrevocable trust for a child, the drawing up of joint wills, etc.

The shorter definition of “premarital agreement” used by the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act (in its Section 1(1): “an agreement between prospective spouses made in contemplation of marriage and to be effective upon marriage”) had the disadvantage of encompassing agreements that were entered by couples about to marry but that were not intended to affect the parties’ rights and obligations upon divorce or death, e.g., Islamic marriage contracts, with their deferred Mahr payment provisions. See Nathan B. Oman, “Bargaining in the Shadow of God’s Law: Islamic Mahr Contracts and the Perils of Legal Specialization,” 45 Wake Forest Law Review 579 (2010); Brian H. Bix, “Mahr Agreements: Contracting in the Shadow of Family Law (and Religious Law) – A Comment on Oman,” 1 Wake Forest Law Review Online
The definition of "property" is adapted from the Uniform Trust Code, Section 103(12).

A premarital agreement or marital agreement may include other terms not in violation of public policy of this state, including terms relating to: (1) rights of either or both spouses to interests in a trust, inheritance, devise, gift, and expectancy created by a third party; (2) appointment of fiduciary, guardian, conservator, personal representative, or agent for person or property; (3) a tax matter; (4) the method for resolving a dispute arising under the agreement; (5) choice of law governing validity, enforceability, interpretation, and construction of the agreement; or (6) formalities required to amend the agreement in addition to those required by this act.

The definition of “separation” was meant to be broad enough to cover those jurisdictions where a legal separation or its equivalent is effected without the need of a court judgment. However, it is not meant to cover situations where a couple is simply living apart as a matter of convenience or preference, e.g., when the spouses have jobs in different cities.

SECTION 3. SCOPE.

(a) This [act] applies to a premarital agreement or a marital agreement entered into after [the effective date of this [act]].

(b) This [act] does not affect any right, obligation, or liability arising under a premarital agreement or marital agreement entered into before [the effective date of this [act]].

(c) This [act] does not apply to:

(1) an agreement between spouses affirming, modifying, or waiving marital rights and obligations which requires court approval to become effective; [or]

(2) an agreement between spouses intending to obtain a marital dissolution or court-decreed separation which resolves their marital rights and obligations and is entered into when a proceeding for marital dissolution or court-decreed separation is anticipated or pending;

(3) an agreement between spouses intending to separate permanently which resolves their marital rights and obligations without court approval or affirmation, if each spouse had independent legal representation when the agreement was signed.
(de) A failure to comply with Section 9 of this Act in connection with the release or surrender of dower, curtesy, homestead, or other marital right in lieu thereof, in a transfer or conveyance of real property to a third party shall—In a transfer or conveyance of property by spouses to a third party, a failure to comply with Section 9 in connection with the release or surrender of a marital right or obligation does not adversely affect the rights of a bona fide purchaser for value or a donee who that establishes good faith detrimental reliance.

Comment

This section distinguishes marital agreements, which are subject to this act, both from agreements that parties might enter at a time when they intend to obtain a divorce or legal separation or they intend to live permanently apart, and also from the conventional transfers of property that may require under state law that one or both spouses waive rights that would otherwise accrue at the death of the other spouse. Bracketed subsection (cb)(3) is provided for those jurisdictions which enforce such agreements without court approval.

In subsection (de) the language regarding a donee who detrimentally relied on the transfer could be useful language to give express protection for a charity which relied on a charitable gift of property.

In general, the enforceability of agreements listed above is left to other law in the state. The category of agreement identified in bracketed subsection (cb)(3), however, requires independent legal representation to fall outside the act. Thus, if such an agreement were entered into between spouses without independent legal representation, the act would govern.

SECTION 4. GOVERNING LAW. The validity, enforceability, interpretation, and construction of a premarital agreement or marital agreement are determined-by:

(1) by the law of the jurisdiction designated in the agreement if that the jurisdiction has a significant relationship to the agreement or either of the parties party, and the designated law is not contrary to a fundamental public policy of this state; or

(2) in the absence of a controlling absent an effective designation in the agreement described in Paragraph (1), by the law of this state, including the choice of law rules of this state.

Comment
This section is adapted from the Uniform Trusts Act, Section 107. It is consistent with Uniform Preparital Agreement Act, Section 3(a)(7), but is broader in scope. The section reflects traditional Conflict of Laws and Choice of Law principles relating to the enforcement of contracts. See Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws, Sections 186-188 (1971). These Conflict of Laws principles include the authority of courts to refuse to enforce the rule(s) of another jurisdiction, even if that jurisdiction has the most significant relationship to the agreement, if that other jurisdiction’s rules are contrary to the fundamental public policy of the enforcing state. “Significant relation” and “fundamental public policy” are to be understood under existing state principles relating to Conflict of Laws, and “contrary to … fundamental public policy” means something more than that the law of the other jurisdiction differs from that of the forum state. See, e.g., International Hotels Corporation v. Golden, 15 N.Y.2d 9, 14, 254 N.Y.S.2d 527, 530, 203 N.E.2d 210, 212-13 (1964); Capital One Bank v. Fort, 255 P.3d 508 (Or. App. 2011) (court refused to apply law under choice of law provision because contrary to “fundamental public policy” of forum state); Russell J. Weintraub, Commentary on the Conflict of Laws 118-125 (6th ed., Foundation Press, 2010).

The limitation of choice of law provisions to jurisdictions having some connection with the parties or the transaction tracks a similar restriction in the Uniform Commercial Code, which restricts choice of law provisions to states with a reasonable relation to the transaction (this was Section 1-105 under the old UCC prior to the 2001 revisions; and Section 1-301 in the (2001) Revised UCC Article 1).

For examples of choice of law and conflict of law principles operating in this area, see, e.g., Bradley v. Bradley, 164 P.3d 567 (Wyo. 2007) (premarital agreement had choice of law provision selecting Minnesota law; amendment to agreement held invalid because it did not comply with Minnesota law for modifying agreements); Gamache v. Smurro, 904 A.2d 91 (Vt. 2006) (applying California law to prenuptial agreement signed in California); Black v. Powers, 628 S.E.2d 546 (Va. App. 2006) (Virginia couple drafted agreement in Virginia, but signed it during short stay in the Virgin Islands prior to their wedding there; the agreement is covered by Virgin Islands law, unless there is a clear party intention that Virginia law apply or Virgin Island law is contrary to the forum state’s public policy); cf. Davis v. Miller, 7 P.3d 1223 (Kan. 2000) (parties can use choice of law provision to choose the state version of the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act to apply to a marital agreement, even though that Act would otherwise not apply).

While parties are encouraged to include choice of law provisions that suit their needs, attorneys choosing choice of law provisions for their clients should do so cautiously and only after detailed research, as negligent selection of the law to be applied (e.g., choosing law that unintentionally invalidates the agreement, cf. Bradley v. Bradley, above) could potentially harm their clients’ interests and leave the attorneys subject to liability for doing so.

SECTION 5. COMMON LAW OF CONTRACTS; PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY.

CONTRACT LAW AND EQUITABLE PRINCIPLES. The common law of contracts and principles of equity supplement this [act], except to the extent displaced by this [act] or another
Comment

This section is similar to Section 106 of the Uniform Trust Code and Section 1-103(b) of the Uniform Commercial Code. Because this act contains broad, amorphous defenses to enforcement like “voluntariness” and “unconscionability” (section 9), there is a significant risk that parties, and even some courts, might assume that other conventional doctrinal contract law defenses are not available because preempted. This section is intended to make clear that common law contract doctrines and principles of equity continue to apply where this act does not expressly displace them. Thus, it is open to parties, e.g., to resist enforcement of premarital agreements and marital agreements based on legal incompetency, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, unconscionability, abandonment, waiver, etc. For example, a premarital agreement presented to one of the parties for the first time hours before a marriage (where financial commitments have been made and guests have arrived from far away) clearly raises issues of duress, and might be voidable on that ground. Cf. In re Marriage of Balcof, 141 Cal.App.4th 1509, 47 Cal.Rptr.3d 183 (2006) (marital agreement held unenforceable on the basis of undue influence and duress); Bakos v. Bakos, 950 So.2d 1257 (Fla. App. 2007) (affirming trial court conclusion that premarital agreement was voidable for undue influence).

The drafting committee recognizes that the application of doctrines like duress varies greatly from jurisdiction to jurisdiction: e.g., on whether duress can be shown even in the absence of an illegal act, e.g. Hall v. Hall, No. 288241, 2010 WL 334721 (Mich. App. 2010) (refusal to set aside settlement agreement on the basis of duress, as duress under Michigan law requires illegal conduct, and none was alleged), and whether the standard of duress should be applied differently in the context of a domestic agreement compared to a commercial agreement. This act is not intended to change state law and principles in relating to these matters.

Rules of construction, including rules of severability of provisions, are also to be taken from state rules and principles. Cf. Rivera v. Rivera, 243 P.3d 1148 (N.M. App. 2010) (premarital agreement that improperly waived the right to alimony and that contained no severability clause deemed invalid in its entirety). Additionally, state rules and principles will govern the ability of parties to include elevated formalities for the revocation or amendment of their agreements.

SECTION 6. FORMATION REQUIREMENTS. A premarital agreement or marital agreement must be in a record signed by both parties. The agreement is enforceable without consideration.

Comment

This section is adapted from Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 2. Almost all jurisdictions currently require premarital agreements to be in writing. A small number of jurisdictions have allowed oral premarital agreements to be enforced based on partial performance. E.g., In re Marriage of Benson, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 905 (App. 2003). This act does not authorize enforcement of oral premarital agreements on that basis.

It is the consensus view of jurisdictions and commentators that premarital agreements are or should be enforceable without (additional) consideration (the agreement to marry or the act of marrying is often treated as sufficient consideration). However, most modern approaches to premarital agreements have by-passed the consideration requirement entirely: e.g., Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 2; American Law Institute, Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution, Section 7.01, comment c (2002); Restatement (Third) of Property, Section 9.4 (2003).

In some states, some courts have raised concerns relating to the consideration for marital agreements. The view of this act is that marital agreements, otherwise valid, should not be made unenforceable on the basis of lack of consideration. As the American Law Institute wrote on the distinction (not requiring additional consideration for enforcing premarital agreements, but requiring it for marital agreements): “This distinction is not persuasive in the context of a legal regime of no-fault divorce in which either spouse is legally entitled to end the marriage altogether.” Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution, Section 7.01, Comment c (2002). The consideration doctrine is sometimes used as an indirect way to ensure minimal fairness in the agreement, and the seriousness of the parties. See, e.g., Lon L. Fuller, “Consideration and Form”, 41 Columbia Law Review 799 (1941). Those concerns for marital agreements are met in this act directly by other provisions. On the conclusion that consideration should not be required for marital agreements, see Restatement (Third) of Property, Section 9.4 (2003), and Model Marital Property Act, Section 10 (1983).

SECTION 7. EFFECTIVE DATE OF AGREEMENT

WHEN AGREEMENT EFFECTIVE. A premarital agreement is effective on marriage. A marital agreement is effective on execution unless the agreement provides otherwise.

Comment

This section is adapted from Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 4. The Drafting Committee took notice of the practice that parties sometimes enter agreements that are part cohabitation agreement and part premarital agreement. This act deals only with the provisions triggered by marriage, without undermining whatever enforceability the cohabitation agreement has during the period of cohabitation.

SECTION 8. VOID MARRIAGE. If the court determines a marriage to be void, a premarital agreement or marital agreement is unenforceable except to the extent necessary to avoid an inequitable result.

Comment
This section is adapted from Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 7. For example, if John and Joan went through a marriage ceremony, preceded by a premarital agreement, but, unknown to Joan, John was still legally married to Martha, the marriage between John and Joan would be void, and whether their premarital agreement should be enforced would be left to the discretion of the court, taking into account whether enforcement in whole or in part would be required to avoid an inequitable result.

SECTION 9. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) A premarital agreement or marital agreement is unenforceable if the party against whom enforcement is sought proves any one of the following:

1. The party’s consent to the agreement was involuntary or the result of duress;
2. The party did not have access to independent legal representation consistent with subsection (a)(1);
3. The agreement did not include a notice of waiver of rights consistent with subsection (a)(2) or an a clear explanation in the party’s primary plain-language of the marital rights or obligations being modified or waived by the agreement unless the party was a lawyer or had independent legal representation at the time the agreement was signed; or
4. Before signing the agreement:
   A. The party did not receive a reasonably accurate description of the nature and value of the other party’s property, and liabilities, and income and the amount of the other party’s income;
   B. The party did not expressly waive, in a separate signed record after independent legal advice, the right to financial disclosure beyond the disclosure provided; and
   C. The party did not have adequate knowledge or a reasonable basis for acquiring adequate knowledge of the property, liabilities, and amount of income of the other party.

(b) If a provision of a premarital agreement or marital agreement modifies or eliminates spousal support and the modification or elimination causes one a party to the agreement to be eligible for support under a program of public assistance at the time of separation or marital dissolution, a court, on request of that party, may require the other party to provide support to the extent necessary to avoid that eligibility.

(c) A court may refuse to enforce a term of a premarital agreement or marital agreement if the term, in the context of the agreement taken as a whole:

((1) the term was unconscionable at the time of signing; or)

((2) the enforcement of the term would result in undue hardship for a party because of a substantial change in circumstances arising since the time that the agreement was signed.)

(d) The court shall decide a question of unconscionability [or undue hardship] under subsection (c) as a matter of law.

(de) A party has access to independent legal representation under this section:

(1) if the party has (1) “Access to independent legal representation” requires:

(A) a reasonable time to decide whether to retain an independent lawyer before signing a premarital agreement or marital agreement;

(B) if the party decides to retain a lawyer, the party has a reasonable time to locate an independent lawyer, obtain advice, and consider the advice provided; and
(C3) If the other party is represented by a lawyer, either the party has either the financial ability to retain a lawyer or an undertaking by the other party has agreed to pay the reasonable fees and expenses of representation.

(2f) A “Notice of waiver of rights” under this section requires language prominently displayed, in a premarital agreement or marital agreement that is substantially similar to the following:

“If you sign this agreement, you may be:

(1) giving up your right to be supported by the person you are marrying or to whom you are married;

(2) giving up your right to ownership or control of money and property;

(3) agreeing to pay bills and debts of the person you are marrying or to whom you are married;

(4) giving up your right to money and property if you divorce;

(5) giving up your right to have your legal fees paid.”

Legislative Note 1: The text places the burden of proof on the party challenging a premarital agreement or a marital agreement. If a state that wants to place retain the burden of proof on the party challenging a premarital agreement but wants to place the burden of proof on the party seeking to enforce a marital agreement, the state should enact subsection (a), as subsection (a)(1), renumber the subparts accordingly, and omit the reference to “marital agreement” in the first line. The following alternative should be enacted as subsection (b)(2) and the remaining subsections of this section should be renumbered accordingly:

(b2) A marital agreement is unenforceable unless the party seeking to enforce the agreement proves all of the following:

(A1) the other party consented to the agreement voluntarily and without duress;

(B2) the other party had access to independent legal representation consistent with subsection (f)(1);

(3) the agreement included a notice of waiver of rights consistent with subsection (gd)(2) or an explanation in plain language of the marital rights or obligations being modified or waived by the agreement, unless the other party was a lawyer or had independent legal representation at the time the agreement was signed; and

(4D) before signing the agreement, the other party:

(Ai) received a reasonably accurate description of the nature and value of the party’s property, and liabilities, and the amount of the party’s income of the other party;

(iiB) expressly waived, in a separate signed record after independent legal advice, the right to financial disclosure beyond the disclosure provided; or (iiiC) had adequate knowledge or a reasonable basis for acquiring adequate knowledge of the property, liabilities, and amount of income of the party.

Legislative Note 2: A state that wants to place the burden of proof on the party seeking to enforce either a premarital agreement or a marital agreement should enact the preceding alternative as subsection (a) and add “A premarital agreement or” at the beginning of the first line.

Legislative Note 3: A state that wants to permit a substantive fairness review of premarital agreements or marital agreements at the time of enforcement should enact all of subsection (c), including the bracketed language.

Comment

This section is adapted from Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 6.

The use of the phrase "involuntary or the result of duress" in subsection (a)(1) is not meant to change the law. The drafting committee is aware of the (quite divergent) law that arose under the "voluntariness" standard of the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act – e.g., compare Marriage of Bernard, 204 P.3d 90 (Wash. 2009) (finding agreement "involuntary" when significantly revised version of premarital agreement was presented three days before wedding) with Brown v. Brown, No. 2050748, 19 So.3d 920 (Table) ( Ala. App. 2007) (agreement presented agreement day before wedding; court held assent to be "voluntary"), aff’d sub. nom Ex parte Brown, 26 So.3d 1222 (Ala. 2009); see generally Judith T. Younger, “Lovers’ Contracts in the Courts: Forsaking the Minimal Decencies,” 13 William & Mary Journal of Women and the Law 349, 359-400 (2007) (summarizing the divergent interpretations of "voluntary" and related concepts under the UPAA); Oldham, "With All My Worldly Goods," supra (same). This act is not intended either to endorse or override any of those decisions. The drafting committee does emphasize that the presence of domestic violence will be of obvious relevance to any conclusion about whether a party’s consent to an agreement was “involuntary or the result of duress.”

The requirement of "access to independent counsel" in subsections (a)(2) and (d)(1) represents the drafting committee's considered view that representation by independent counsel is crucial for a party waiving important legal rights. The act stops short of requiring representation for an agreement to be enforceable, see California Family Code § 1612(c)(restrictions on spousal support allowed only if the party waiving rights consulted with independent counsel); California Probate Code § 143(a) (waiver of rights at death of other spouse unenforceable unless the party waiving was represented by independent counsel); cf. Ware v. Ware, 687 S.E.2d 382 (W. Va. 2009) (access to independent counsel required, and presumption of validity for premarital agreement available only where party challenging the agreement consulted with independent counsel). When a party has an obligation to make funds available for the other party to retain a lawyer, under subsection (d)(1)(C), this refers to the cost of a lawyer competent in this area of law, not necessarily the funds needed to retain as many lawyers as the first party may have.

The notice of waiver of rights of subsections (a)(3) and (d)(2) is adapted from the Restatement (Third) of Property, Section 9.4(3) (2003), and it is also similar in purpose to California Family Code §1615(c)(3). It creates a safe harbor by use of the designated warning language of (d)(2), or language substantially similar, but also allows enforcement where there has been an explanation in plain language of the rights and duties being modified or waived by the agreement.

The requirement of reasonable financial disclosure of subsection (a)(4) pertains only to assets of which the party knows or reasonably should know. There will be occasions where the valuation of an asset can only be approximate, or may be entirely unknown, and this can and should be noted as part of a reasonable disclosure. Disclosure will qualify as “reasonably accurate” even if a value is approximate or difficult to determine, and even if there are minor inaccuracies.

The act makes waiver of the right of financial disclosure (or the right of financial disclosure beyond what has already been disclosed) possible only if the waiver is signed after receiving legal advice. This reflects a view by a majority of the drafting committee that it is too easy to persuade an unrepresented party to sign or initial a waiver provision, and that the party waiving that right would then likely be ignorant of the magnitude of what is being given up. Even when notified in the abstract of the rights being given up (consistent with subsection (d)(2)), it would make a great deal of difference if the party thinks he or she is giving up a claim to a portion of $80,000, when in fact what is being given up is a claim to a portion of $8,000,000. There was a concern that this requirement of legal advice for a waiver of the right to (further) financial disclosure might effectively require legal representation for all premarital agreements and marital agreements. However, it remains the case that when agreements are entered into with adequate financial disclosure, the absence of a valid waiver would be no defense to enforcement of an agreement under this act.

Subsection (b) as adapted from the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 6(b). The drafting committee has noted that other jurisdictions have in the past chosen even more significant protections for vulnerable parties. See, e.g., N.M. Stat. § 40-3A-4(B) (premarital agreement may not affect spouse’s right to “support”); Spurgeon v. Spurgeon, 572 N.W.2d 595 (Iowa 1998) (widow’s spousal allowance could be awarded, even in the face of express provision in premarital agreement waiving that right); Estate of Thompson, No. 11-0940, 2012 WL 469985 (Iowa App.) (same) Hall v. Hall, 4 So.3d 254 (La. App. 2009) (waiver of interim support in premarital agreement unenforceable as against public policy). However, the drafting committee decided that the procedural and substantive protections of this act already give vulnerable parties significant protections (including protections far beyond what was given in the original Uniform Premarital Agreement Act), and that the act creates an appropriate balance between protection of vulnerable parties and protection of freedom of contract.

Subsection (c) includes a bracketed provision for states who wish to include a “second look,” considering the fairness of enforcing an agreement relative to the time of enforcement. The suggested standard if one of “undue hardship” based on a substantial change of circumstances since the time the agreement was signed. There is no requirement that the change in circumstances have been unforeseeable. This language broadly reflects the standard applied in a number of states. E.g., Connecticut Code § 46b-36g(2) (premarital agreements); New Jersey Statutes § 37:2-38(b) (premarital agreements); North Dakota Code § 14-03.1-07 (premarital agreements); Ansin v. Craven-Ansin, 929 N.E.2d 955, 963-64 (Mass. 2010) (marital agreements); Bedrick v. Bedrick, 17 A.3d 17, 27 (Conn. 2011) (marital agreements). However, it should be noted that even in such “second look” states, case-law invalidating premarital agreements and marital agreements at the time of enforcement almost universally regard rights at divorce. There is little case-law invalidating waivers of rights arising at the death of the other spouse grounded on the unfairness at the time of enforcement.

Subsection (c) characterizes questions of unconscionability (or undue hardship) as questions of law for the court. This follows the treatment of unconscionability in conventional commercial contracts. See UCC § 2-302; Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 208, comment f. This subsection is not intended to establish or modify the standards of review under which such conclusions are reviewed considered on appeal under state law.

A notice of waiver of rights is “prominently displayed” for the purpose of subsection (d)(2) when it is displayed in font larger than the rest of the document, in all capital letters, in bold print or italics, or if it is presented to the other party in a separate document requiring separate signature or initials.

Waiver or modification of claims relating to a spouse’s pension is subject to the constraints of applicable state and federal law, including but not limited to ERISA (Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, 19 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.). See, e.g., Robins v. Geisel, 666 F.Supp.2d 463 (D. N.J. 2009) (wife’s premarital agreement waiving her right to any of her husband’s separate property did not qualify as a waiver of her spousal rights as beneficiary under ERISA); Strong v. Dubin, 901 N.Y.S.2d 214 (App. Div. 2010) (waiver in premarital agreement conforms with ERISA waiver requirement and is enforceable).

Some jurisdictions put the burden of proof on the party seeking enforcement of the agreement. See, e.g., Randolph v. Randolph, 937 S.W.2d 815 (Tenn. 1996) (party seeking to enforce premarital agreement had burden of showing, in general, that other party entered agreement “knowledgeably”; in particular, that a full and fair disclosure of assets was given or that it was not necessary due to the other party’s independent knowledge); Stancil v. Stancil, No. E2011-00099-COA-R3-CV, 2012 WL 112600 (Tenn. Ct. App., Jan. 13, 2012) (same); In re Estate of Cassidy, 356 S.W.3d 339 (Mo. App. 2011) (parties seeking to enforce waivers of rights at the death of the other spouse have the burden of proving that procedural and substantive requirements were met). The language in the legislative note is offered for those jurisdictions which want the burden placed on the party seeking enforcement, for either premarital agreements, marital agreements, or both.

Many jurisdictions impose greater scrutiny or higher procedural safeguards for marital agreements as compared to premarital agreements. See, e.g., Ansin v. Craven-Ansin, 929 N.E.2d 955 (Mass. 2010); Bedrick v. Bedrick, 17 A.3d 17 (Conn. 2011). Those jurisdictions view agreements in the midst of marriage as being especially at risk of coercion (the analogue of “hold up” in a commercial arrangement) or overreaching. Additionally, these conclusions are sometimes based on the view that parties already married are in a fiduciary relationship in a way that parties about to marry, and considering a premarital agreement, are not. Linda J. Ravdin, Premarital Agreements: Drafting and Negotiation 16-18 (American Bar Association, 2011). Many other jurisdictions and The American Law Institute (in its Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution, Section 7.01, Comment b (2002)) treat marital agreements under the same standards as premarital agreements. This is the approach adopted by this act.

SECTION 10. UNENFORCEABLE TERMS.

(a) In this section, “custodial responsibility” means physical or legal custody, access, visitation, or other custodial right or duty with respect to a child.

(b) A term in a premarital or marital agreement is not enforceable to the extent that it:

1. adversely affects a child’s right to support;
2. limits or restricts a remedy available to a victim of domestic violence under other law of this state other than this [act];
3. modifies the grounds for a court-decreed separation or marital dissolution available under other law of this state other than this [act]; or
4. penalizes a party for initiating a legal proceeding leading to a court-decreed separation or marital dissolution.

(cba) A term in a premarital agreement or marital agreement that defines the rights or duties of the parties regarding custodial responsibility is not binding on a court. "Custodial responsibility" means physical or legal custody, access, visitation, or other custodial right or duty with respect to a child.

Legislative Note: A state may vary the terminology of "custodial responsibility" to reflect the terminology used in state law other than this act.

Comment

This section lists provisions that are not binding on a court (this contrasts with the agreements mentioned in section 3, where the point was to distinguish agreements whose regulation fell outside this act). They include some provisions (e.g., regarding the parents’ preferences regarding custodial responsibility) that, even though not binding on a court, a court might consider by way of guidance.

The definition of "custodial responsibility" is adapted from the Uniform Collaborative Law Act.

There is a long-standing consensus that premarital agreements may not bind a court on matters relating to children – cannot determine custody or visitation, and cannot limit the amount of child support (though an agreed increase of child support may be enforceable). E.g., In re Marriage of Best, 901 N.E.2d 967, 970-971 (Ill. App. 2009); cf. Pursley v. Pursley, 114 S.W.3d 820, 823-825 (Ky. 2004) (agreement by parties in separation agreement to child support well in excess of guideline amounts is enforceable, not unconscionable or against public policy). The basic point is that parents and prospective parents do not have the power to waive the rights of third parties (their current or future children), and do not have the power to remove the jurisdiction or duty of the courts to protect the best interests of minor children. Subsection (ba)(1) applies also to step-children, to whatever extent the state imposes child-support obligation on step-parents.

The drafting committee has taken notice of the general consensus in the case-law that courts will not enforce premarital agreement provisions relating to topics beyond the parties’ financial obligations inter se. And while some courts have generally refused to enforce provisions in premarital agreements and marital agreements that regulate (or attach financial penalties to) conduct during the marriage, e.g., Diosdado v. Diosdado, 118 Cal. Rptr.2d 494 (App. 2002) (refusing to enforce provision in agreement imposing financial penalty for infidelity); Marriage of Dargan, 13 Cal. Rptr. 522 (App. 2004) (refusing to enforce provision that penalized husband’s drug use by transfer of property); see also Brett R. Turner and Laura W. Morgan, Attacking and Defending Marital Agreements 379 (2nd ed., ABA Section on Family Law, 2012) (“It has been generally held that antenuptial agreements attempting to set the terms of behavior during the marriage are not enforceable” (footnote omitted)), the act does not expressly deal with such provisions, in part because a few courts have chosen to enforce premarital agreements relating to parties’ cooperating in obtaining religious divorces or agreeing to appear before a religious arbitration board. E.g., Avitzur v. Avitzur, 446 N.E.2d 136 (N.Y. 1983) (holding enforceable religious premarital agreement term requiring parties to appear before religious tribunal and accept its decision regarding a religious divorce). Also, while there appear to be scattered cases in the distinctly different context of separation agreements where a court has enforced the parties’ agreement to avoid fault grounds for divorce, e.g., Masser v. Masser, 652 A.2d 219 (N.J. App. Div. 1994); cf. Eason v. Eason, 682 S.E.2d 804 (S.C. 2009) (agreement not to use adultery as defense to alimony claim enforceable); see generally Linda J. Ravdin, Premarital Agreements: Drafting and Negotiation 111 (ABA, 2011) (“In some fault states, courts may enforce a provision [in a premarital agreement] that waives fault”), and the drafting committee is aware of no case law enforcing an agreement to avoid no-fault grounds; taking into account the different context in which premarital agreements and marital agreements are entered, the Drafting Committee preferred the position of the American Law Institute (Principles of the Law of Family Dissolution, Section 7.08 (2002)), that agreements affecting divorce grounds in any way should not be enforceable.

The drafting committee took notice of the common practice of escalator clauses and sunset provision in premarital agreements and marital agreements, making parties’ property rights vary with the length of the marriage. Cf. Peterson v. Sykes-Peterson, 37 A.3d 173 (Ct. App. 2012) (rejecting argument that sunset provision in premarital agreement is unenforceable because contrary to public policy). Subsection (b)(4), which makes provisions unenforceable that penalize one party’s initiating an action that leads to the dissolution of a marriage, does not cover such escalator clauses. Additionally, nothing in this provision is intended to affect the rights of parties who enter valid covenant marriages in states that make that alternative form of marriage available.

SECTION 11. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. A statute of limitations applicable to an action asserting a claim for relief under a premarital agreement or marital agreement is tolled during the marriage of the parties to the agreement, but equitable defenses limiting the time for enforcement, including laches and estoppel, are available to either party.

Comment

This Section is adapted from Uniform Premarital Agreement Act, Section 8. As the Comment to that Section stated: "In order to avoid the potentially disruptive effect of compelling litigation between the spouses in order to escape the running of an applicable statute of limitations, Section 8 tolls any applicable statute during the marriage of the parties (contrast Dykema v. Dykema, 412 N.E. 2d 13 (Ill. App. 1980) (statute of limitations not tolled where fraud not adequately pleaded, hence premarital agreement enforced at death))—____. However, a party is not completely free to sit on his or her rights because the section does preserve certain equitable defenses."
SECTION 12. UNIFORMITY OF APPLICATION AND CONSTRUCTION. In applying and construing this uniform act, consideration must be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among states that enact it.

SECTION 13. RELATION TO ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN GLOBAL AND NATIONAL COMMERCE ACT. This [act] modifies, limits, and supersedes the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7001 et seq., but does not modify, limit, or supersede Section 101(c) of that act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7001(c), or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in Section 103(b) of that act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7003(b).

SECTION 14. SAVINGS CLAUSE. This [act] does not affect any right, obligation, or liability arising under a premarital or marital agreement entered into before the effective date of this [act].

SECTION 15. REPEALS. The following are repealed:

(1) [Uniform Premarital Agreement Act]

(2) [Uniform Probate Code Section 2-213( ) & (Waiver of Right to Elect and of Other Rights)]

(3) .................................

(4) .................................

(5) .................................]
