Uniform Community Property Disposition at Death Act

Prefatory Note

The Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act (UDCPRDA) was approved by the Uniform Law Commission in 1971. The UDCPRDA established a system for non-community property states to address the treatment of community property acquired by spouses before they moved from a community property state to a non-community property state. According to the UDCPRDA, its purpose was “to preserve the rights of each spouse in property which was community property prior to change of domicile, as well as in property substituted therefor where the spouses have not indicated an intention to sever or alter their ‘community’ rights.” Unif. Disp. Comm. Prop. Rights Death Act, Pref. Note, at 3 (1971). As of 2020, sixteen states have enacted the UDCPRDA. Five states enacted the UDCPRDA in the 1970s, shortly after its approval. Or. Rev. Stat. § 112.705; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 510-21; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 15-20-101; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 391.210; Mich. Comp. L. Ann. § 557.261. Another eight states enacted the UDCPRDA in the 1980s. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 31C-1; N.Y. Est. Powers & Trusts Law § 6-6.1; Ark. Code. Ann. § 28-12-101; Va. Code § 64.1-197; Alaska Stat. § 13.41.005; Wyo. Stat. § 2-7-720; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 45a-458; Mont. Code Ann. § 72-9-101. One state enacted it in the 1992, (Fla. Stat. Ann. § 732.21), and two states – Utah and Minnesota – enacted the UDCPRDA in 2012 and 2013, respectively. Utah Code § 75-2b-101; Minn. Stat. § 519A.01.

In its original form, the UDCPRDA offered substantial benefits for citizens in non-community property states that adopted the act, namely the recognition and protection of property rights acquired in a community property state in which citizens were formerly domiciled. Today, this is more important than ever, as Americans are more mobile than ever before. It is estimated that 7.5 million people moved from one state to another in 2016. State-to-State Migration Flows: 2016, available at <https://www.census.gov/data/tables/time-series/demo/geographic-mobility/state-to-state-migration.html>. Undoubtedly, a significant subset of that 7.5 million involves Americans moving from one of the nine community or marital property states to one of the forty-one non-community property states. As Americans migrate, the property previously acquired in a community property state “does not lose its character by virtue of a move to a common law state.” In re Marriage of Moore & Ferrie, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 543 (Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, 1993); In re Kessler, 203 N.E.2d 221 (Ohio 1964); Commonwealth v. Terjen, 90 S.E.2d 801 (Va. 1956). As some commentators have noted, “[O]nce [property] rights are fixed, they cannot be constitutionally changed during the lifetime of the owner merely by moving the personalty across one or more state lines, regardless of whether there is or is not a change of domiciles.” William Q. De Funiak, Conflict of Laws in the Community Property Field, 7 ARIZ. L. REV. 50, 51 (1966). The Prefatory Note to the UDCPRDA observes that this is both a matter of policy “and probably a matter of constitutional law.” Unif. Disp. Comm. Prop. Rights Death Act, Pref. Note (1971).

Under traditional conflict-of-laws principles, the result is the same: a move from a community property state to a non-community property one does not change the nature of the property. Sarah N. Welling, The Uniform Disposition of Community Property at Death Act, 65 KY. L. J. 541, 545 (1977). The Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws counsels that “[a] marital property interest in a chattel, or right embodied in a document, which has been acquired

1 by either or both of the spouses, is not affected by the mere removal of the chattel or document to 2 a second state, whether or not this removal is accompanied by a change of domicile to the other
3 state on the part of one or both of the spouses.” RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS 4 § 259 (1971). Nevertheless, the existing law in non-community property states is often 5 uncertain. The UDCRPDA provided a relatively simple solution that served to clarify an 6 otherwise murky area of law.

7 Since its original promulgation in 1971, however, many changes in the law of marital 8 property and in estate planning practice have occurred. The rise of the popularity of nonprobate 9 transfers and the recognition of same-sex marriage throughout the United State are just some of 10 the significant changes in the law that could not have been foreseen or accounted for in the 11 original UDCRPDA. Consequently, an update of the act is needed to accommodate these 12 changes and others, as well as to reexamine some underlying policy choices made in the original 13 act some fifty year ago.

14 This Uniform Community Property Disposition at Death Act (UCPDDA) revises and 15 updates UDCRPDA. Like its predecessor, the UCPDDA preserves the community property 16 character of property acquired by spouses while domiciled in a community property jurisdiction, 17 even after their move to a non-community property state. Unlike its predecessor, however, the 18 UCPDDA broadens the applicability of the act. The UCPDDA preserves some rights that 19 spouses would have had in the community property jurisdiction for some reimbursement claims 20 and for certain bad faith acts or acts of mismanagement of community property by a spouse, 21 whereas the predecessor UDCRPDA “only define[d] the dispositive rights, at death, of a married 22 person as to his interests at death in property” subject to the act.

23 In addition, it should be clear that the UCPDDA has the potential to benefit a larger 24 number of individuals than the UDCRPDA, insofar as a greater number of states now allow for 25 the creation of community property between spouses than at the time of the UDCRPDA. In 26 addition to spouses in foreign civil law jurisdictions, spouses in Arizona, California, Guam, 27 Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Puerto Rico, Texas, Washington, and now Wisconsin 28 can accumulate community property during marriage. Although Wisconsin classifies such 29 property as “marital property,” rather than “community property,” such a terminological 30 distinction should not serve as a barrier to the application of the UCPDDA to a spouse moving 31 from Wisconsin to a non-community property state. See, e.g., IRS Pub. 555 (treating Wisconsin 32 “marital property” the same as “community property”). Furthermore, registered domestic 33 partners in California, Nevada, and Washington may also now accumulate community property, 34 and the UCPDDA would also apply to those relationships when a registered domestic partner 35 moves to and dies in an adopting state. Finally, spouses in Alaska, Tennessee, Kentucky, and 36 South Dakota may elect by agreement to acquire community property. When such an election is 37 properly made, those spouses may also benefit from the application of the UCPDDA. Although 38 the term “community property” is not defined in either the UDCRPDA or the UCPDDA, it can 39 be broadly and generally explained as property created or acquired during marriage that is owned 40 jointly and concurrently by the spouses from the time of its acquisition. The above jurisdictions 41 all allow for the creation of community property, although others may be added to the list over 42 time.

1           Sections 1 and 2 provide the title of the act and definitions of terms used throughout the 2 act.

3           Section 3 sets forth the applicability of the UCPDDA and the property to which it applies, 4 namely, only the community property acquired by spouses while domiciled in a community 5 property jurisdiction, as well as any rents, profits, appreciations, increases, or traceable mutations 6 of that property. Once spouses move to a non-community property state, their newly acquired 7 marital property is governed by the law in that state, unless it is traceable to property that was 8 community property or treated as such.

9           Section 3 also makes clear that if the spouses have partitioned or reclassified their 10 community property or waived rights under the act, the UCPDDA no longer applies to that 11 property, as the spouses themselves have ended the community property classification of the 12 property and mutually allocated to each other separate property interests that were previously 13 held as community.

14           Section 4 provides the required form for a partition, reclassification, or waiver, as the 15 laws of a state adopting this act are not likely to provide rules outside of the act for such matters.

16           Section 5 assists courts and the parties in evidentiary matters of proof in applying the 17 UCPDDA. Specifically, even if two spouses are married under a community regime in a 18 community property state, they may still acquire separate property that is owned individually and 19 is not part of their community regime. Traditional “opt out” community property states 20 generally impose a presumption that all property acquired by either spouse during the existence 21 of their community is presumed to be community, unless a spouse can demonstrate to the 22 contrary. Section 5 adopts the same type of rebuttable presumption, such that a party asserting 23 the applicability of the act would need to prove only that the property was acquired while 24 domiciled in a community property jurisdiction under a community property regime. It was 25 thought that any other rule might make proof of application of the act too difficult, given the 26 passage of time, the absence of records, and the fading of memories between the time when the 27 property was originally acquired and the time of death of the decedent.

28           Section 6 is the heart of the act. It provides that upon the death of one spouse, half the 29 property to which the act applies belongs to the decedent and the other half to the surviving 30 spouse. This is the same result that would be achieved at the death of one spouse in a 31 community property jurisdiction.

32           Section 7 is new and has no analogue in the UDCPRDA. It expands the scope of the act 33 to allow a court to recognize reimbursement rights and rights of redress for certain bad faith 34 actions by one spouse that might impair the rights of the other spouse with respect to property to 35 which the act applies. One such example could be the unauthorized alienation of property to the 36 prejudice of the other spouse. This section allows for a damage or equitable claim to be brought 37 at the death of one spouse by the other or by the spouse’s personal representative, provided a 38 spouse’s interest in property was prejudiced by the actions of the other spouse.

39           Sections 8 and 9 provide limitation periods within which a party must act to preserve

1 rights under the act. These sections recognize that the periods may differ depending upon 2 whether a claim is brought in a probate proceeding or in a separate judicial proceeding to perfect 3 title to property.

4         Section 10 protects third persons that have transacted in good faith and for value.
5 Otherwise, third persons could be subject to claims under Section 7 if one spouse had engaged in 6 acts of bad faith management of community property while alive. Section 10 ensures that in 7 most instances, a third person will be protected from these claims.

8         Sections 11 through 17 concern principles of law and equity, uniform application of the 9 act, electronic signatures, transitional and savings provisions, repeal of inconsistent laws, and the 10 effective date of the act. Notably, Section 15 makes the act applicable – within permissible 11 constitutional limitations – to any judicial proceeding commenced after the effective date of the 12 act, even to those who have moved from a community property jurisdiction and died before 13 enactment of the act.

2                   Section 1. Title

3                   This [act] may be cited as the Uniform Community Property Disposition at Death Act.

4                   Section 2. Definitions

5                   In this [act]:

6                               (1) “Electronic” means relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, 7 wireless, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities.

8                               (2) “Jurisdiction” means the United States, a state, a foreign country, or a political 9 subdivision of a foreign country.

10                              (3) “Partition” means divide voluntarily property to which this [act] otherwise 11 would apply.

12                              (4) “Person” means an individual, estate, business or nonprofit entity, public 13 corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or other legal 14 entity.

15                              (5) “Personal representative” includes an executor, administrator, successor 16 personal representative, special administrator, and person that performs substantially the same 17 function.

18                              (6) “Property” means anything that may be the subject of ownership, whether real 19 or personal, legal or equitable, or any interest therein.

20                              (7) “Record” means information:

21   (A) inscribed on a tangible medium; or

22   (B) stored in an electronic or other medium and retrievable in perceivable 23 form.

(8) “Reclassify” means change the characterization or treatment of community property to property owned separately by spouses.

(9) “Sign” means, with present intent to authenticate or adopt a record:

(A) execute or adopt a tangible symbol; or

(B) attach to or logically associate with the record an electronic symbol, sound, or process.

(10) “Spouse” means an individual in a marriage or other relationship:

(A) under which community property could be acquired during the existence of the relationship; and

(B) that is in existence at the time of death of either party to the relationship.

(11) “State” means a state of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, or any territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. The term includes a federally recognized Indian tribe.

Comment

(1) Electronic. The term “electronic” is based upon the standard Uniform Law Commission definition.

(2) Jurisdiction. The term “jurisdiction” is included in this act in order to ensure the applicability of this act to individuals who acquired community property in a foreign country. For example, if a couple were married in Cuba, a community property jurisdiction, and acquired stock while domiciled there but sold the stock after moving to Florida, a non-community jurisdiction, the widow of the spouse in whose name the stock was registered would have a one-half interest in the property. See, e.g., Quintana v. Ordonez, 195 So. 2d 577 (Dist. Ct. Fla. 3d Cir. 1967); see also Estate of Bach, 548 N.Y.S.2d 871 (Sur. Ct. 1989) (applying the New York version of the UDCPRDA to a decedent who died in New York in 1987, after having moved with his wife from Boliva in 1957).

(3) Partition. The term “partition” is defined to mean a severance or division by spouses of property that was community property or treated as community property. A partition may occur while the parties are domiciled in a community property state or after they move to a non-

1 community property state. In the latter case, a partition can still occur irrespective of whether the 2 property retains its community property character in the new state or is merely treated as 3 community property for purposes of application of this act.

4
5 (4) Person. The definition of “person” is based upon the standard Uniform Law 6 Commission definition.

7
8 (5) Personal representative. The definition of “personal representative” is based upon a 9 similar definition in the Uniform Probate Code. See Unif. Prob. Code § 1-201(35).

10 11 (6) Property. The definition of “property” is based upon a similar definition in the 12 Uniform Trust Code. See Unif. Trust Code § 103(12).

13
14 (7) Record. The definition of “record” is based upon the standard Uniform Law 15 Commission definition.

16
17 (8) Reclassify. The definition of “reclassify” is necessary to recognize that spouses may 18 “transmute” or change the treatment of property from community to separate after they move 19 from a community property jurisdiction to a non-community property jurisdiction. Although 20 community property jurisdictions also have rules in effect for changing separate property to 21 community property, such a change would be outside the scope of this act, which seeks only to 22 maintain the treatment of community property acquired by spouses after moving to a non-23 community property jurisdiction.

24
25 (9) Sign. The definition of “sign” is based upon the standard Uniform Law Commission 26 definition.

27
28 (10) Spouse. The term “spouse” is defined expansively to include not only married 29 persons, of either sex, but also partners in other arrangements, such as domestic or registered 30 partnerships, under which community property may be acquired. See, e.g., Cal. Fam Code § 31 297.5 (stating that domestic partners “have the same rights, protections and benefits, and are 32 subject to the same responsibilities, obligations and duties under law, whether derived from 33 statutes, administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law, or any other 34 provisions or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed upon spouses”); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 35 122A.200(a)(“Domestic partners have the same rights, protections and benefits, and are subject 36 to the same responsibilities, obligations and duties under law, whether derived from statutes, 37 administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law or any other provisions 38 or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed upon spouses.”); Wash. Rev. Code Ann.
39 §297.5(a) (2006) (“Property ... acquired after marriage or after registration of a state registered 40 domestic partnership by either domestic partner or either husband or wife or both, is community 41 property.”). The term may also encompass putative spouses and spouses under common law or 42 informal marriages. The putative spouse doctrine is a remedial doctrine recognized in many 43 states that allows a person in good faith to enjoy community property and other civil effects of 44 marriage, despite not being a party to a legally valid marriage. See, e.g., Model Marriage & Div.
45 Act § 209. Although few, if any, community property states recognize common law marriage,

1 Texas does recognize “informal marriages” and thus parties to such an arrangement could also be 2 included in the definition of a “spouse” under this act. See, e.g., Tex. Fam. Code § 2.401.

3
4 (11) State. The definition of “state” is based upon the standard Uniform Law Commission 5 definition.

6 7 Section 3. Included and Excluded Property

8 (a) Subject to subsection (b), this [act] applies to the following property of a spouse, 9 without regard to how the property is titled or held:

10 (1) if a decedent was domiciled in this state at the time of death:

11 (A) all or a proportionate part of each item of personal property, wherever 12 located, that was community property under the law of the jurisdiction where the decedent or the 13 surviving spouse was domiciled when the property was acquired or when it became community 14 property after acquisition.

15 (B) income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other increase derived from or 16 traceable to property described in subparagraph (A); and 17 (C) property traceable to property described in subparagraph (A) or (B); 18 and

19 (2) regardless of whether a decedent was domiciled in this state at the time of 20 death:

21 (A) all or a proportionate part of each item of real property located in this 22 state traceable to community property or acquired with community property under the law of the 23 jurisdiction where the decedent or the surviving spouse was domiciled when the property was 24 acquired or when it became community property after acquisition; and

25 (B) income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other increase, derived from or 26 traceable to property described in subparagraph (A).

1 (b) If spouses acquired community property by compliance with the law of a jurisdiction 2 that allows for creation of community property by transfer of property to a trust, the spouses are 3 deemed to have community property under this [act] only to the extent the property is held in the 4 trust or characterized as community property by the terms of the trust or the laws of the 5 jurisdiction under which the trust was created.

6 (c) This [act] does not apply to property that:

7 (1) spouses have partitioned or reclassified; or 8 (2) is the subject of a waiver of rights granted by this [act].

9 Comment

10
11 This section makes the act applicable to spouses who were formerly domiciled in a 12 community property jurisdiction. The term “jurisdiction” is used, rather than the narrower term 13 “state,” to be clear that this act would apply to a spouse who was domiciled in foreign 14 jurisdictions where community property may be acquired. See, e.g., Quintana v. Ordonez, 195 15 So. 2d 577 (Dist. Ct. Fla. 3d Cir. 1967); see also Estate of Bach, 548 N.Y.S.2d 871 (Sur. Ct.
16 1989). Moreover, this act is applicable whenever a spouse was domiciled at any time in the past 17 in a community property jurisdiction, has acquired property there, and has moved to another 18 jurisdiction. Thus, if A and B were married in state X (a community property state) and acquired 19 personal property there, but then moved to state Y (a non-community property state) prior to 20 moving again to state Z (also a non-community property state) where they acquired real property 21 before A eventually died, state Z should apply this act to the property acquired by A and B in 22 state X and state Z.

23
24 Under subsection (a)(1)(A), this act applies to all personal property that was originally 25 classified as a community property by the state at the time at which it was acquired. The current 26 location of the personal property is not relevant for application of this act. Thus, if A and B were 27 married in state X (a community property state), acquired a car there, and eventually moved to 28 state Z (a non-community property state) where A eventually died, then the car would be subject 29 to this act, even if the car was left in storage in state Y.

30
31 Under subsection (a)(1)(B), this act applies to “income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other 32 increase” derived from or traceable to community property under (a)(1)(A). In some community 33 property jurisdictions, income from separate property is community property. Although not 34 included in subsection (a)(1)(B), “income, rent, profit, appreciation, and other increase” from 35 separate property in those states where such income is considered community property is 36 included under subsection (a)(1)(A), as that property would be “community property under the 37 law of the jurisdiction where the decedent or the surviving spouse was domiciled” prior to 38 moving to the non-community property state. In addition, subsection (a)(1)(A) applies to 1 appreciations or other increases in separate property that result from community effort or 2 expenditures of time, toil, or talent of a spouse in community, provided that the appreciation or 3 other increase would be characterized as community property by the relevant community 4 property jurisdiction. See, e.g., Pereira v. Pereira, 103 P. 488 (Cal. 1909). This result would not 5 obtain, however, when a couple moves from one of the community property states where such an 6 “appreciation[] or other increase” would not give rise to a community property interest in 7 separate property but would instead give rise to a claim for reimbursement by one spouse against 8 the other. See, e.g., Jensen v. Jensen, 665 S.W. 2d 107 (Tex. 1984); La. Civ. Code. art. 2368.

9 Reimbursement claims of this nature are governed by section 7 of this act rather than this 10 section.

11 12 The reference in this section to “income” should be read to include net income, rather 13 than the gross income, from community property, as well as things produced from community 14 property (i.e., “appreciations and other increases”), even if not technically revenue producing.
15 Thus, if a $500,000 house were purchased completely with community funds and increased in 16 value to $700,000 after the spouses moved to a non-community property state, then the entire 17 house, not merely $500,000 in value, is classified as community property. Similarly, crops 18 produced from a community property farm and a foal produced from a horse that is owned as 19 community property are also considered to be community property.

20
21 Subsection (a)(1)(B) applies to “income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other increase” 22 from community property produced after moving to a non-community property jurisdiction, 23 Indeed, prior to a move, such a rule is unnecessary as all community property states already 24 characterize “income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other increase” derived from community 25 property as community property, and thus such “income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other 26 increase” is already included under subsection (a)(1)(A). The rule in subsection (a)(1)(B), 27 however, is necessary to be clear that even after spouses move to a non-community property 28 state, the “income, rent, profit, appreciation, or other increase” produced by community property 29 acquired prior to the move is still community property after the move to a non-community 30 property state. Thus, interest produced from a community property savings account after A and 31 B move from state X (a community property state) to state Z (a non-community property state) is 32 still treated as community property, irrespective of the location of the account.

33
34 Under subsection (a)(2), this act adopts the traditional situs rule for real estate and is 35 made applicable to all real estate located in a state where this act has been adopted, irrespective 36 of whether the party to whom the act applies is domiciled in the enacting state. Thus, if A and B, 37 while domiciled in a state X (a community property state) acquired real estate with community 38 funds in state Y (a non-community property state), but then move to state Z (also a non-39 community property state) where A eventually died, then this act will apply to the real estate in 40 state Y, assuming state Y has enacted this act. Whether or not state Z has enacted this act will be 41 important in ascertaining how the personal property of A is distributed, but not in the disposition 42 of the real estate located in state Y.

43
44 Similarly, if A and B while domiciled in state X (a community property state) acquired 45 real estate with community property in state Y (a non-community property state that has not 46 adopted this act) and in state Z (a non-community property state that has adopted this act) but

1 then moved to state Q (a non-community property state that has not adopted this act) where A 2 eventually died, then the real estate in state Z would be subject to this act, but the real estate in 3 state Y would not be. Nevertheless, under the law of state Y, the former community property 4 rights of the spouses may be subject to a constructive or resulting trust under traditional equity
5 and conflicts of law principles. See, e.g., Quintana v. Ordone, 195 So. 2d 577 (Fla. App. 1967); 6 Edwards v. Edwards, 233 P. 477 (Okla. 1924); Depas v. Mayo, 11 Mo. 314 (1848)

7
8 Under both subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2), this act applies to “all or a proportionate part” 9 of property that was acquired with community property. In other words, when an asset is 10 acquired partly with community property and partly with separate property, at least some portion 11 of the property should be characterized as community property. The issue of apportionment and 12 commingling, however, is a complex one with many state variations applicable to different types 13 of assets.

14 In some community property states, an “inception of title” theory is used, such that the 15 characterization of the property is dependent upon the characterization of the right at the time of 16 acquisition. For example, a house acquired in a credit sale before marriage would remain 17 separate property under an “inception of title” theory even if the vast majority of the payments 18 were made after marriage and with community funds. In this instance, the community would 19 have a claim for reimbursement for the amount of funds expended for the separate property of 20 the acquiring spouse. Section 7 of this act accommodates reimbursement claims, if such a claim 21 would be appropriate under the law of the relevant jurisdiction. In other jurisdictions, a “pro 22 rata” approach is employed, which provides for a combination of community and separate 23 ownership based in proportion to the payments contributed by either the community or the 24 spouses separately. The act accommodates this approach by not requiring an “all or nothing” 25 classification of community property. Rather, the act is applicable when “all or the proportionate 26 part” of property would be community property according to the law of a jurisdiction in which 27 the spouse was formerly domiciled at the time of acquisition.

28 Even among states that employ a “pro rata” approach, there is considerable variation for 29 how the apportionment is made. As the comments in the UDCPRDA stated, “[a]ttempts at 30 defining the various types of situations which could arise and the varying approaches which 31 could be taken, depending upon the state, suggest that the matter simply be left to court decision 32 as to what portion would, under applicable choice of law rules, be treated as community 33 property.” The UCPDDA follows the same approach. Thus, if A acquires $100,000 of life 34 insurance, pays five of the monthly $1000 premiums from funds prior to marriage, pays 10 of the 35 premiums with community property after marrying B, and pays 10 more premiums (before 36 dying) from earnings acquired by B after A and B move to a non-community property state, then 37 some portion of the life insurance policy should be considered community property, if the law of 38 the community property state so treated it. This act leaves to the courts how the determination of 39 the apportionment is to be made.

40 Under subsection (a)(1)(C), this act applies not only to property that was community 41 property under the law of the community property state but also to any property that is traceable 42 to property that was community property or treated as community property. Simply stated, 43 property is “traceable” to community property if the property changes form without changing

1 character. WILLIAM A. REPPY, CYNTHIA A. SAMUEL, AND SALLY BROWN RICHARDSON, 2 COMMUNITY PROPERTY IN THE UNITED STATES 161 (2015) (quoting W. BROCKELBANK, THE 3 COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAW OF IDAHO 134 (1964)). By way of illustration, if after moving from 4 state X (a community property state) to state Z (a non-community property state), A and B 5 transfer money from a community property bank account opened in state X to a bank in their 6 new domicile, state Z, then the bank account in state Z is subject to this act because it is traceable
7 to community property. Similarly, if A and B are married in state X (a community property 8 state), open a bank account there funded solely with community property and buy a car with that 9 money after moving to state Y (a non-community property state), then the car would still be 10 subject to this act because it is traceable to community property. The same result would obtain 11 even if A and B moved again from state Y to state Z (another non-community property state) and 12 exchanged their prior car for a new one in state Z. The new car would still be subject to this act 13 because it is traceable to the community property originally acquired in state X.
14

15 Subsection (b) of this section applies to so-called “opt-in” states where spouses can elect 16 community property by establishing a community property trust. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. §
17 34.77.100; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 386.20; Tenn. Code Ann. § 17-35-101; S.D. Codified Laws § 18 55-17-3. The intent of this act is not to override the terms of a community property trust but 19 rather to treat as community property only that property held in a community property trust or 20 characterized as community property by the terms of the trust or the relevant state law. Different 21 community property trust provisions and different state laws may offer different rules for what 22 constitutes community property. Alaska law, for example, provides that “appreciation and 23 income of property transferred to a community property trust is community property if declared 24 in the trust to be community property.” Alaska Stat. § 34.77.030(i). Most other community 25 property trust statutes are silent on the treatment of income from community property. Kentucky 26 law, however, provides that “[a]ll property owned by a community property trust shall be 27 considered community property,” but “[w]hen property is distributed from a community property 28 trust, it shall no longer constitute community property.” Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 386.22(7) & (8).
29 The intent of this act is to apply only to the property held in trust or treated as community 30 property by the law of the jurisdiction where the trust was created. Once it is ascertained what is 31 characterized or treated as community property, then this act would apply to that property and to 32 property traceable to it under subsection (a). It is notable, however, that Section 6 of this act 33 generally does not govern the disposition on death of property that has been transferred by the 34 decedent to the decedent’s surviving spouse by “nonprobate transfer instrument,” which would 35 include property transferred on death pursuant to the provisions of a community property trust.
36

37 At least one state allows for the acquisition of community property by spouses pursuant 38 to an agreement, including an agreement that provides “that all property acquired by either or 39 both spouses during the marriage is community property.” Alaska Stat. §34.77.100. In such a 40 case, subsection (a) of this section, rather than subsection (b), is applicable.
41

42 Subsection (c) of this section makes clear that this act does not apply in cases where 43 spouses have themselves divided former community property by means of a partition or when 44 spouses have changed the classification of their property from community to separate. Similarly, 45 this act does not apply to property as to which rights have been waived. Section 4 of this act 46 prescribes the necessary form and procedures for partition, reclassification, or waiver of rights.

(b) A spouse domiciled in this state may waive a right granted by this [act] only in compliance with the law of this state, including the choice-of-law rules of this state, applicable to waiver of a spousal property right.

Comment

For a waiver of rights under this act, the parties must comply with the standards for enforceability of a waiver of spousal property rights under the law of this state. See, e.g., Unif. Prob. Code § 2-213. Under the law of many states, a waiver of spousal rights is governed by the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act (1983). More recently, the Uniform Law Commission has promulgated the Uniform Premarital and Marital Agreement Act (2012). Section 9 of that act requires, among other things, that a waiver not be involuntary or executed under duress, that a party have access to independent legal representation, and that a party have had adequate financial disclosure. Unif. Premarital & Marital Agr. Act § 9.

A mere unilateral act by a spouse of holding property in a form, including a revocable trust, that has paid or has transferred property on death to a third person is not a partition of the

1 property or an agreement waiving rights granted under this [act]. The mere taking of title to 2 property that was previously acquired as community property in the form of a transfer-on-death
3 deed does not operate as a partition, reclassification, or waiver. For example, if after moving 4 from a community property state to a non-community property state, A retitles a community 5 property bank account owned with B into a bank account in A's name exclusively with a pay-on-6 death designation to C, the retitling of former community property in the exclusive name of "A, 7 pay-on-death, C" does not constitute a partition. For a partition or reclassification to occur, both 8 spouses must agree to the severance of their community property interests and comply with the 9 necessary form requirements imposed by this section.

10
11 This section does not attempt to specify the requisite form or procedure for a partition 12 prior to moving to the enacting state, which should be governed by the law of the community 13 property state rather than this act. If parties have partitioned or reclassified previously acquired 14 community property after moving to a non-community property state, this act would not apply to 15 any such property owned by the decedent at death. The terms "partition" and "reclassify" are 16 defined in Section 2 of this act.

17 18 Section 5. Community Property Presumption

19 All property acquired by a spouse when domiciled in a jurisdiction where community 20 property could then be acquired by the spouse by operation of law as an incident of marriage or 21 similar relationship is presumed to be community property. This presumption may be rebutted by 22 a preponderance of the evidence.

23 Comment

24
25 This section applies to so-called "opt out" states that provide for the acquisition of 26 community or marital property by operation of law and as an incident of marriage. Scholars 27 have noted that in the nine "opt out" states, community or marital property is not created by 28 contract, although spouses can "opt out" by contract. Caroline Bermeo Newcombe, The Origin 29 and Civil Law Foundation of the Community Property System, Why California Adopted It and 30 Why Community Property Principles Benefit Women, 11 U. MD. L.J. RACE RELIG. GENDER & 31 CLASS 1 (2011) (One "characteristic of community property systems is that they arise by 32 operation of law."). This section adopts a blanket presumption in favor of treating all property 33 acquired by a spouse while domiciled in a community property jurisdiction as community 34 property, provided, of course, that the laws of the community property state allowed community 35 property to "then be acquired" by that person. In other words, the presumption applies only to 36 those persons who could acquire community property under the laws of the relevant jurisdiction 37 by virtue of marriage or similar relationship. Consequently, the presumption does not apply to 38 unmarried individuals or to those who have opted out of the community regime even if they 39 acquire property while domiciled in a community property jurisdiction, as those individuals 40 could not then acquire community property in that jurisdiction.

1 Although stated in various ways, the blanket presumption of this section is common in 2 community property jurisdictions. See, e.g., N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-12(A) (“Property acquired 3 during marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is presumed to be community property.”); 4 Wisc. Stat. § 766.31(2) (“All property of spouse is presumed to be marital property.”); Tex. Fam.
5 Code § 3.003(a) (“Property possessed by either spouse during or on dissolution of marriage is 6 presumed to be community property”); La. Civ. Code art. 2340 (“Things in the possession of a 7 spouse during the existence of a regime of community of acquets and gains are presumed to be 8 community, but either spouse may prove they are separate property.”); Cal. Fam. Code § 760; 9 Model Marital Prop. Act. § 4(a) (“All property of spouses is marital property except that which is 10 classified otherwise by this Act.”); Wisc. Stat. § 766.31(2) (“All property of spouses is presumed 11 to be marital property.”).

12
13 Despite the above presumption, a party may prove that the relevant property was 14 separate, even though acquired during the existence of a community regime, such as by 15 demonstrating that the property was acquired by inheritance. Although different community 16 property states provide different standards for rebutting the presumption of community property, 17 this act adopts a preponderance standard for rebutting the presumption, as have a number of 18 community property states. See, e.g., Marriage of Ettefagh, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3rd 419 (Cal. App.
19 2007); Talbot v. Talbot, 864 So. 2d 590 (La. 2003); Brandt v. Brandt, 427 N.W. 2d 126 (Wisc.
20 App. 1988); Sanchez v. Sanchez, 748 P.2d 21 (N.M. App. 1987); But see Tex. Fam. Code § 21 3.03(b) (“The degree of proof necessary to establish that property is separate property is clear
22 and convincing evidence.”); Reed v. Reed, 44 P.3d 1100 (Idaho 2002) (requiring “reasonable 23 certainty and particularity” to rebut the presumption).

24
25 Unlike Section 2(2) of the UDCPRDA, this act does not impose a presumption against 26 the applicability of this act for property acquired in a non-community property state and held in a 27 form that creates rights of survivorship. See, e.g., Trenk v. Soheili, 273 Cal. Rptr. 3d 184 (Ct.
28 App. 2d Cir. 2d Div. 2020) (stating that “the manner in which a married couple holds title to real 29 property is not sufficient in itself to rebut the statutory presumption that is community 30 property”). Taking title to property in various forms is often a unilateral act that should not by 31 itself serve as a presumption of partition of interests in a community asset. After all, a spouse 32 may move to non-community property state and open a bank account with a pay-on-death 33 designation to a friend or a sibling. Such an account should not be presumed to be excluded from 34 this applicability of this act, as the relevant account may have been funded with community 35 property acquired prior to the move. The ultimate treatment of the relevant account will depend 36 upon whether it can be proved that the money in the account was traceable to community 37 property.

38 39 Section 6. Disposition of Property at Death

40 (a) One-half of the property to which this [act] applies belongs to the surviving spouse of 41 a decedent and is not subject to disposition by the decedent at death.

42 (b) One-half of the property to which this [act] applies belongs to the decedent and is

1 subject to disposition by the decedent at death.

2 Alternative A

3 (c) The property that belongs to the decedent under subsection (b) is not subject to 4 elective-share rights of the surviving spouse.

5 Alternative B

6 (c) For the purpose of calculating the augmented estate of the decedent and the elective-7 share rights of the surviving spouse:

8 (1) property under subsection (a) is deemed to be property of the surviving 9 spouse; and

10 (2) property under subsection (b) is deemed to be property of the decedent.

11 End of Alternatives

12 (d) [Except for the purpose of calculating the augmented estate of the decedent and the 13 elective-share rights of the surviving spouse, this] [This] section does not apply to property 14 transferred to the surviving spouse by right of survivorship or under a revocable trust or other 15 nonprobate transfer.

16 (e) This section does not limit the right of a surviving spouse to [insert statutory 17 allowances].

18 (f) If at death a decedent purports to dispose of property that, under this section, belongs 19 to the surviving spouse to a third person and disposes of other property to the surviving spouse, 20 this section does not limit the authority of the court under other law of this state to require that 21 the spouse elect between retaining the disposition from the decedent or asserting rights under this 22 [act].

23 Legislative Note: A traditional elective-share state should adopt Alternative A and adopt the language 24 beginning with “This” in subsection (d). An augmented-estate, elective-share state whose statute does 25 not address rights in community property adequately should adopt Alternative B and adopt the language

1 beginning with “Except” in subsection (d). In subsection (e), a state should insert the statutory reference 2 to the applicable allowances, such as homestead, exempt property, or family.

3 4 Comment

5
6 Under subsection (a), at the death of one spouse, one-half the property to which this act
7 applies belongs to the surviving spouse. This is the universal approach of community property
8 states. As a result, the decedent cannot dispose of the property belonging to the surviving spouse 9 by will or intestate succession. An attempt to do so would be ineffective.

10
11 If, however, the decedent disposes of property subject to this act by nonprobate transfer 12 in favor of the third person, Section 7, rather than this section, applies. In other words, this act, 13 like the law in community property states, provides that reimbursement or equitable claims may 14 be available to a surviving spouse when a decedent improperly alienates the interest of a spouse
15 by means of a nonprobate transfer. See, e.g., T.L. James & Co. v. Montgomery, 332 So. 2d 834 16 (La. 1975).

17
18 Under subsection (b), at the death of one spouse, one-half the property to which this act 19 applies belongs to the decedent. Again, this is universal approach of community property states.
20 As a result, the decedent can dispose of that property by any probate or nonprobate mechanism.
21 Elective share rights that are common in non-community property states do not apply in 22 community property states, at least not with respect to community property in those states. With 23 respect to elective shares rights, however, there is great variation among non-community 24 property states. In some states, a surviving spouse’s elective share rights are a fractional share 25 (often 1/3) in the decedent’s property. In such a case, states should elect Alternative A, which 26 precludes further application of elective share rights in the decedent’s property under this act.
27 Other states, however, grant elective share rights in an “augmented estate,” which is frequently 28 composed of all the decedent’s property, all the decedent’s nonprobate transfers, and all the 29 surviving spouse’s property and nonprobate transfers to others. See Unif. Prob. Code § 2-203.
30 In those states, Alternative B should be elected so that the both the property of the decedent and 31 the surviving spouse are considered part of the augmented estate, but then the surviving spouse’s 32 portion of the property is credited in satisfaction of the surviving spouse’s elective share rights.
33 See, e.g., Unif. Prob. Code § 2-209(a)(2).

34
35 If the decedent dies intestate, then one-half of the property covered by this act is included 36 in the decedent’s intestate estate. The intestate law of most states would grant to the surviving 37 spouse a lump sum plus at least one half of the remainder of the decedent’s property, which 38 would be in addition to the one-half interest granted to the surviving spouse in property to which 39 this act applies.

40
41 By way of illustration of this section, assume A and B were formerly domiciled in state X 42 (a community property jurisdiction) where all their property was community property and have 43 subsequently moved to a state Y (a non-community property state that has adopted this act).
44 Upon moving to state Y, A and B acquired a home in state Y, titled solely in B’s name but with 45 funds from the proceeds of the sale of the home in state X. A and B also acquired stock while 46 domiciled in state X, but held it in safety deposit boxes located in states U and V (two other non-47 community property states). A and B also retained a summer house in state X, which they

1 acquired while domiciled there and which was titled solely in B's name. A and B also acquired 2 real property in state Z (a non-community property state that has not adopted this act) for 3 investment purposes. Finally, B acquired bonds held in B's name issued by the company that 4 employed B and acquired with earnings from B's job in state Y.

5
6 At B's death, the home in state Y and the stock located in states U and V would be 7 property subject this act, and consequently, B would have the right under this section to dispose 8 of half. The home retained in state X would be community property under the law of state X, but 9 this act applies only to real property located in the adopting state. The investment property 10 located in state Z would not be subject to this act because state Z has not adopted the act .
11 Finally, the bonds held in B's name would not be subject to this act because they were acquired 12 with property earned and acquired in state Y, a non-community property state.

13
14 Subsection (c) provides two alternatives. In states that grant a surviving spouse an 15 elective share only in the probate estate, this section excludes elective share rights in property 16 subject to this act, as the surviving spouse is already provided a one-half interest in the relevant 17 property. In states that have adopted an augmented-estate approach to the elective share, this 18 subsection makes clear that for purposes of calculating the augmented estate, one-half of the 19 property assigned to the decedent is treated as the decedent's property and the other one-half is 20 treated as the property of the surviving spouse.

21
22 Subsection (d) provides that, with one exception, this section does not apply to any 23 property transferred to a surviving spouse by means of a nonprobate transfer or a right of 24 survivorship designation. After all, if the property is transferred to a surviving spouse by the 25 decedent then the surviving spouse should not have further rights to that property or claims 26 against the decedent's estate by virtue of the transfer. The one exception is for purposes of 27 ascertaining elective-share rights in those states that have adopted an augmented-estate approach 28 to the elective share.

29
30 Under Subsection (e), this act does not limit a surviving spouse's claim for other statutory 31 allowances, such as homestead allowances, allowances for exempt property, and family 32 allowances. See, e.g., Unif. Prob. Code §§ 2-402, 2-403, and 2-404.

33
34 Subsection (f) preserves the common law right of election, which provides that if the 35 decedent disposes of the surviving spouse's share of property under this act but transfers other 36 property to the surviving spouse, a court may require the surviving spouse to make an equitable 37 election to retain the disposition from the decedent or to assert rights under this act. In the words 38 of one authority, "th[e] doctrine of election is a broad principle of equity, which holds that one 39 who has acquired inconsistent rights from one or more sources, has his choice or election as to 40 which he will take, but he cannot have both." W.S. McCLANAHAN, COMMUNITY PROPERTY IN 41 THE UNITED STATES § 11.6 (1982). In this context, "the principle [of election] requires that one 42 who accepts a benefit conferred by a will[] must accept all the terms of a will so far as they 43 concern him, renouncing any rights which he may have which are inconsistent with the will; or if 44 he elects to stand on his rights which are inconsistent with the will; or if he elects to stand on his 45 rights which are inconsistent with those under the will, he thereby renounces his rights conferred 46 by the will." Id. See also J. THOMAS OLDHAM, TEXAS MARITAL PROPERTY RIGHTS 481 (5th ed.

2011) (“If a spouse attempts to devise more than one-half of any item of community property, and the other spouse is devised something under the will, the spouse is put to an ‘election’ whether to take the benefits under the will (and to permit the devise of more than 50% of the item of community property), or whether to reject the benefit under the will and take 50% of each item of community property.”).

Section 7. Other Remedies Available at Death

(a) At the death of an individual, the surviving spouse or a personal representative, heir, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent may assert a right based on an act of:

(1) the surviving spouse or decedent during the marriage or similar relationship;

or

(2) the decedent that takes effect at the death of the decedent.

(b) In determining rights under subsection (a) and corresponding remedies, the court:

(1) shall apply equitable principles; and

(2) may consider the community property law of the jurisdiction where the decedent or surviving spouse was domiciled when the property was acquired or enhanced.

Comment

Subsection (a) confirms that comparable rights that would be available to protect a spouse in a community property jurisdiction remain available at death in a non-community property state under this act. Two rights often provided by community property jurisdictions are rights of reimbursement and rights associated with monetary claims against a spouse for marital waste, fraud, or bad faith management. These rights should be available to a spouse without regard to whether the act of the other spouse giving rise to the claim occurred in the community property jurisdiction, prior to a move, or in the non-community property jurisdiction, after a move. Furthermore, nonprobate transfers of community property to a third person without the consent of the surviving spouse may give rise to claims by the surviving spouse under this section.

Claims for reimbursement are commonly available when community property has been used to satisfy a separate obligation or when separate property has been used to improve community property or vice versa, see, e.g., La. Civ. Code art. 2364, 2366, and 2367; Cal. Fam. Code § 2640. Different community property states calculate the amount of reimbursement differently. See, e.g., Hiatt v. Hiatt, 487 P.2d 1121 (Idaho 1971) (awarding reimbursement based upon the enhanced value of the property even if it exceeds the amount spent); Portillo v. Shappie, 636 P.2d 878 (N.M. 1981) (assessing reimbursement based upon the enhanced value of 1 the improved property even if it exceeds the amount of money expended); La. Civ. Code art.

2 2366 (providing for reimbursement based upon the amount expended); Marriage of Sedlock, 849 3 P.2d 1243 (Wash. App. 1993) (awarding reimbursement based upon the amount spent); Estate of 4 Kobyliski v. Hellstern, 503 N.W.2d 369 (Wis. App. 1993) (assessing reimbursement based upon 5 the greater of the amount spent or the value added). This section grants courts flexibility in 6 assessing the amount of the reimbursement.

7
8 The rights granted by this section are operable at the death of an individual and may not 9 be asserted during the existence of the marriage. This approach is consistent with the law of 10 various community property jurisdictions. See, e.g., La. Civ. Code art. 2358 (“A claim for 11 reimbursement may be asserted only after termination of the community property regime, unless 12 otherwise provided by law.”). But see Model Marital Property Act § 13 (allowing claims for 13 breach of the duty of good faith and for an accounting to be brought by spouses during an 14 ongoing marriage). The relief sought under this section may, however, be for actions of a spouse 15 taken either during life or that take effect at death. For instance, during life, a spouse may use 16 community funds to augment a separate property asset. Moreover, a spouse during the marriage 17 may have inappropriately donated property to a third person. Similarly, at the death of the 18 decedent, the decedent may have inappropriately transferred property belonging to the surviving 19 spouse to a third person by nonprobate transfer. Although community property states generally 20 enforce such transfers, they correspondingly grant a right to claim damages, a right to recover the 21 property, or a right to reimbursement by the surviving spouse. Again, this section grants a court 22 broad authority to craft legal or equitable remedies to protect a spouse. Of course, the 23 application of this section must yield when appropriate to federal law. See, e.g., Employment 24 Retirement Security Act, 29 U.S.C. Section 1001 et seq.; Boggs v. Boggs, 520 U.S. 833 (1997) 25 (holding that ERISA pre-empted state community property law and remedies, even though the 26 relevant ERISA-governed retirement plan was funded with community property).

27
28 Subsection (b) provides that a court in evaluating a claim under subsection (a) should 29 apply “equitable principles” to craft rights and remedies and “may consider” the law of the 30 community property jurisdiction where the decedent or the surviving spouse was formerly 31 domiciled at the time the property was acquired or enhanced in deciding what rights to recognize 32 and what remedies to provide to a spouse under this act. A court, however, is not limited by this 33 section to proceed only in the manner or exactly as the court in a community property 34 jurisdiction would proceed. Often ascertaining the existence and scope of a right that could have 35 been asserted in a community property jurisdiction is an exceedingly difficult task and could 36 involve difficult investigations of the law of different states or foreign jurisdictions from years or 37 even decades in the past. Such laws might not be readily available to or ascertainable by a court 38 under this act, given barriers in publication and language. For example, ascertaining the nuances 39 of French community property law for a couple that has moved from Paris to New York in the 40 1960s would be a daunting task indeed. Thus, subsection (b) is intended to provide flexibility to 41 a court to consider the laws of the community property jurisdiction but not necessarily proceed 42 as a court would in that jurisdiction.

43
44 Similarly, in ascertaining the remedies associated with the right under this section, a court 45 should look to but not be bound by the law of the community property jurisdictions. Even 46 among community property jurisdictions, the remedies associated with various rights often vary

1 significantly when one spouse's interest has been unduly impaired by another spouse with 2 authority to manage or alienate community property. Although most instances of application of 3 this section will involve monetary claims against by one spouse against another, this section does 4 not limit a court's power to grant other equitable relief, which may involve recognition of rights 5 against third persons to whom property has been transferred by one spouse without authorization 6 of the other.

7
8 Equitable doctrines, such as a "constructive trust," are common remedies used by courts 9 to protect the interest of a spouse. In California, for example, a court may award a defrauded 10 spouse a percentage interest or an amount equal to a percentage interest in any asset transferred 11 in breach of a spouse's fiduciary duty. Cal. Fam. Code § 1101. In Texas, the doctrine of "fraud 12 on the community" protects one spouse when the other wrongfully depletes community property 13 through actual or constructive fraud by allowing a court to allocate other property to the 14 defrauded spouse through any legal or equitable remedy necessary, including a money judgment 15 or a constructive trust. See, e.g., Tex. Fam. Code § 7.009; see also Osuna v. Quintana, 993 16 S.W.2d 201 (Tex. Ct. App. Corpus Christi 1999) ("The breach of a legal or equitable duty which 17 violates the fiduciary relationship existing between spouses is termed 'fraud on the community,' 18 a judicially created concept based on the theory of constructive fraud."). In Louisiana, a spouse 19 may be awarded damages when the other spouse acted fraudulently or in bad faith. See La. Civ.
20 Code art. 2354 ("A spouse is liable for any loss or damage caused by fraud or bad faith in the 21 management of the community property."). In addition to damages and equitable relief, some 22 community property states statutorily grant courts authority to add the name of a spouse to a 23 community asset titled solely in the name of the other spouse in order to protect the interest of 24 the previously unnamed spouse. See, e.g., Cal. Fam. Code § 1101 (c); Wisc. Stat. § 766.70(3).
25 This section provides the court with broad authority to grant damages or to craft any other 26 appropriate equitable remedy necessary to protect a spouse. Available legal and equitable 27 remedies available in courts of this state may not be co-extensive with the legal and equitable 28 remedies available in the relevant community property jurisdiction.

29
30 Because the grant of authority to courts under subsection (b)(2) is a discretionary one, a 31 higher court should review a trial court's application of this subsection only under an "abuse of 32 discretion" standard.

33
34 This section must be read in conjunction with Section 9 of this act, which protects good 35 faith transferees of property who give value. Thus, good faith transferees for value will be 36 protected by Section 9 of this act, such that a spouse's claim for bad faith management would 37 solely be cognizable against the other spouse. If, however, one spouse improperly donates or 38 transfers property to which this act applies to a third person who is not acting in good faith, 39 equitable relief against a third person may, in the discretion of the court, be available to the 40 spouse whose rights are impaired. After all, improper gifts of community property by one spouse 41 are generally voidable as against a third person in community property jurisdictions. See, e.g., 42 Polk v. Polk, 39 Cal. Rptr. 824 (App. 1964); Wisc. Stat. § 766.70; La. Civ. Code art. 2353; 43 Mezey v. Fioramonti, 65 P.2d 980 (Ariz. App. 2003); Model Marital Property Act § 6(b).

44 45 Section 8. Right of Surviving Spouse

(a) The surviving spouse of the decedent may assert a claim for relief with respect to rights this [act] according to the following rules:

(1) In an action asserting a right in or to property, the surviving spouse must:

(A) commence an action against the heirs, devisees, or nonprobate transferees of the decedent who are in possession of the property not later than [three years] after the death of the decedent; or

(B) send a demand in a record to the personal representative of the decedent not later than [six months] after the appointment of the personal representative.

(2) In all other actions, the surviving spouse must:

(A) send a demand in a record to the personal representative of the decedent not later than [six months] after the appointment of the personal representative; or

(B) if no personal representative is appointed, commence an action not later than [three years] after the death of the decedent.

(b) Absence a timely demand under subsection (a), the personal representative may distribute the assets of the decedent's estate without personal liability for a spouse's claim under this [act].

Legislative Note: A state should insert in subsection (a)(1)(A) and (a)(2)(B) the time for asserting a claim to a nonprobate asset, probating a will, or challenging a revocable trust and in subsections (a)(1)(B) and (a)(2)(A) the time for asserting a claim in a probating proceeding. The six-month period is not an uncommon period for a non-claim statute for creditors, and the three-year period is adapted from statute of limitations on claims challenging revocable trusts and for actions against distributees of an estate.

Comment

The time periods provided in this section are generally borrowed from other areas of law. Specifically, a six-month period is not an uncommon period for a non-claim statute for creditors, and the three-year period is adapted from statutes of limitations on claims challenging revocable trusts and for actions against distributees of an estate. See Unif. Trust Code § 604; Unif. Prob. Code § 3-1006. This section fills a gap that existed in the UDCPRDA, which did not provide for

1 specific statute of limitations periods for bringing claims under the act. Thus, courts were left to 2 speculate as to what time periods applied. See, e.g., Johnson v. Townsend, 259 So. 3d 851 (Fla.
3 4th D. Ct. App. 2018) (holding that in the absence of a specific statute of limitations in the 4 Florida version of the UDCPRDA, the general statute of limitation for asserting a claim or cause 5 of action against the decedent applied).

6
7 Subsection (a)(1) of this section allows a surviving spouse to protect rights in or to 8 specific assets under this act and provides a statute of limitation for doing so. It provides time 9 frames for a surviving spouse to assert a right under this act either directly against an heir, 10 devisee, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent who is in possession of property that belongs to 11 the surviving spouse under this act (see (a)(1)(a)) or in a probate proceeding by sending a 12 demand to the personal representative of the decedent (see (a)(1)(b)). For example, if after the 13 death of B, B's spouse, A, asserts a claim to personal property subject to this act that has been 14 given by B in a will to C, then A, whose claim is an action in or to property, may assert that 15 claim directly against C under subsection (a)(1)(a) or in the probate proceeding under subsection 16 (a)(1)(b)). A surviving spouse, however, is not foreclosed from pursuing the option in (a)(1)(a) 17 if a claim under subsection (a)(1)(b) is first brought and is unsuccessful.

18
19 Subsection (a)(2) of this section provides a procedure and statute of limitation for all 20 other claims of the surviving spouse under this act that are not claims in or to specific assets. For 21 example, if A's claim is one for reimbursement of community funds under Section 7, then A's 22 claim is a claim as a creditor and not one in or to specific property. As a result, A would have to 23 assert the claim under subsection (a)(2).

24
25 Subsection (b) allows the personal representative of the decedent to distribute assets of 26 the decedent's estate without risk of personal liability if the surviving spouse fails to make a 27 timely demand under subsection (a).

28 29 Section 9. Right of Heir, Devisee, or Nonprobate Transferee

30 An heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent may assert a claim for relief 31 with respect to rights under this act according to the following rules:

32 (a) In an action asserting a right in or to property, an heir, devisee, or nonprobate 33 transferee must:

34 (1) commence an action against the surviving spouse of the decedent who 35 is in possession of the property not later than [three years] after the death of the decedent; or

36 (2) send a demand in a record to the personal representative of the 37 decedent not later than [six months] after the appointment of the personal representative.

(b) In all other actions, an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee must:

- (1) send a demand in a record to the personal representative of the decedent not later than [six months] after the appointment of the personal representative; or
- (2) if no personal representative is appointed, commence an action not later than [three years] after the death of the decedent.

Legislative Note: A state should insert in subsection (a)(1) and (b)(2) the time for asserting a claim to a nonprobate asset, probating a will, or challenging a revocable trust and in subsections (a)(2) and (b)(1) the time for asserting a claim in a probating proceeding.

Comment

The time periods provided in this section are generally borrowed from other areas of law. Specifically, a six-month period is not an uncommon period for a non-claim statute for creditors, and the three-year period is adapted from claims challenging revocable trusts and for actions against the distributees of an estate. See Unif. Trust Code § 604; Unif. Prob. Code § 3-1006. This section fills a gap that existed in the UDCPRDA, which did not provide for specific statute of limitations periods for bringing claims under the act. Thus, courts were left to speculate as to what time periods applied. See, e.g., Johnson v. Townsend, 259 So. 3d 851 (Fla. 4th D. Ct. App. 2018) (holding that in the absence of a specific statute of limitations in the Florida version of the UDCPRDA, the general statute of limitation for asserting a claim or cause of action against the decedent applied).

Subsection (a)(1) of this section allows an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent to protect rights under this act and provides a statute of limitation for doing so. It provides time frames for an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee to assert a right under this act either directly against a surviving spouse of the decedent who is in possession of property that belongs to an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee under this act (see (a)(1)) or in a probate proceeding by sending a demand to the personal representative of the decedent (see (a)(2)). Unlike in section 8, the personal representative of the decedent has an obligation to attempt to ascertain whether the decedent has property rights that should be protected under this act, even if no claim is asserted under subsection (a)(1) by an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee. See, e.g., Unif. Prob. Code §§ 3-703 (general duties) & 3-706 (duty to prepare an inventory).

Subsection (b) of this section provides a procedure and statute of limitation for all other claims of an heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent under this act that are not claims in or to specific assets.

Section 10. Protection of Third Person

(a) With respect to property to which this [act] applies, a person is not liable under this

1 [act] to the extent the person:

2 (1) transacts in good faith and for value:

3 (A) with a spouse; or

4 (B) after the death of the decedent, with a surviving spouse, personal 5 representative, heir, devisee, or nonprobate transferee of the decedent; and

6 (2) does not know or have reason to know that the other party to the transaction is 7 exceeding or improperly exercising the party's authority.

8 (b) Good faith under subsection (a) does not require a person to inquire into the extent or 9 propriety of the exercise of authority by the other party to the transaction.

10 Comment

11
12 This section is based upon Section 1012 of the Uniform Trust Code. Like the Uniform 13 Trust Code, this section does not define "good faith." It does, however, require that a third 14 person be without knowledge or a reason to know that the other party to the transaction is acting 15 without authority with respect to property to which this act applies. For a definition of 16 knowledge, see Unif. Trust Code § 104. Moreover, this section provides that a person dealing 17 with another party is not charged with a duty to inquire as to the extent or the propriety of the 18 exercise of the purported power or authority of that party. This section, like the Uniform Trust 19 Code, acknowledges that a definition of good faith that is consistent with a state's commercial 20 statutes, such as Section 1-201 of the Uniform Commercial Code, would be consistent with the 21 purpose of this section. This section should be read in conjunction with Section 7 of this act, 22 which provides that courts retain the ability at the death of one spouse to grant equitable relief to 23 the other for actions that have impaired rights granted by this act.

24
25 This section protects third persons in two different situations. First, during life, both 26 spouses may engage in a variety of transactions with third parties concerning the property to 27 which this act applies. This section protects third persons who deal with either spouse 28 concerning property to which this act applies, provided the third person gives value, is in good 29 faith, and does not have knowledge or reason to know that the spouse who is a party to the 30 transaction is improperly exercising authority over property. Although third persons in 31 community property jurisdictions are ordinarily allowed to deal with a spouse who has apparent 32 title concerning a marital asset during the existence of the marriage, no good reason could be 33 found for protecting bad faith third parties with knowledge or reason to know of the commission 34 of fraud on the rights of the other spouse. For example, if A retitles community property 35 belonging partly to B solely in A's name and sells it to C, C is protected from any claim by A 36 with respect to the property provided C gave value, is in good faith, and does not know that A 37 improperly transferred property belonging to B. To the extent B has a cognizable claim under

1 Section 7 of this act, it will be solely against A, not C. On the other hand, if A donated a 2 community asset to C, C would not be protected by this section, and B's claim under Section 7 of 3 this act could be cognizable against A or C or both.

4
5 Second, this section also applies after the death of a decedent. Section 8 of this act 6 provides relevant time periods within which a surviving spouse may assert rights against a 7 personal representative of the decedent, as well as heirs or transferees of the decedent. Similarly, 8 it also provides relevant time periods within which the heirs, beneficiaries, or creditors of the 9 decedent may assert rights against the surviving spouse or the personal representative of the 10 decedent. This section protects third persons who transact with those relevant parties in 11 possession of apparent title to property, provided the third person gives value, is in good faith, 12 and is without knowledge that the other party to the transaction is improperly exercising 13 authority. For example, if after A's death, A's surviving spouse, B, sells Blackacre, which is 14 titled solely in B's name, to C, C will be protected from liability under this section, even if 15 Blackacre was subject to this act because it was traceable to community property, provided, of 16 course, C was in good faith and without knowledge that B was exceeding his authority.

17 18 Section 11. Principles of Law and Equity

19 The principles of law and equity supplement this [act] except to the extent inconsistent 20 with this [act].

21 Comment

22
23 This act is intended to provide a uniform process for recognition at death of community 24 property rights acquired in another state. As a result, this act necessarily provides new rules for 25 recognition of rights and remedies that may be unconventional in non-community property 26 states. The elaboration of such rules, however, is not intended to displace traditional common-27 law and equitable rights, remedies, and procedures that may be available in a non-community 28 property state, except to the extent that they would be inconsistent with the provisions of this act.
29 For example, care has been taken not to delineate an exhaustive list of legal or equitable 30 remedies that a court may fashion in applying section 7 of this act. Rather, section 7 provides 31 that a court shall employ general equitable principles available in the enacting state in evaluating 32 a claim brought under that section. Similarly, sections 8 and 9 provide limitation periods within 33 which certain claims must be brought by a spouse, heir, devisee, nonprobate beneficiary, or 34 personal representative of the decedent. Those sections, however, do not attempt to 35 comprehensively catalogue all possible claims for relief that may be brought by those or other 36 parties. For instance, this act does not provide for limitation periods for creditors of the decedent 37 to assert claims and instead resorts to general principles of law and equity in the enacting 38 jurisdiction.

39 40 Section 12. Uniformity of Application and Construction

41 In applying and construing this uniform act, a court shall consider the promotion of uniformity of the law among jurisdictions that enact it.

Section 13. Relation to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act

This [act] modifies, limits, or supersedes the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7001 et seq.[, as amended], but does not modify, limit, or supersede 15 U.S.C. Section 7001(c), or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in 15 U.S.C. Section 7003(b).

Legislative Note: It is the intent of this act to incorporate future amendments to the cited federal law. A state in which the constitution or other law does not permit incorporation of future amendments when a federal statute is incorporated into state law should omit the phrase “, as amended”. A state in which, in the absence of a legislative declaration, future amendments are incorporated into state law also should omit the phrase.*

Section 14. Saving Provision

If a right with respect to property to which this [act] applies is acquired, extinguished, or barred on the expiration of a limitation period that began to run under another statute before [the effective date of this [act]], that statute continues to apply to the right even if the statute has been repealed or superseded by this [act].

Section 15. Transitional Provision

Except as provided in Section 14, this [act] applies to a judicial proceeding with respect to property to which this [act] applies commenced on or after [the effective date of this [act]] regardless of the date of the death of the decedent.

Comment

This act is intended to have the widest possible effect within constitutional limitations. Specifically, this act applies to the property of a decedent who dies before the enactment of this act. This act cannot be fully retroactive, however. Constitutional limitations preclude retroactive application of rules of construction to alter vested property rights. Also, rights already barred by a statute of limitation or rule under former law are not revived by a possibly longer statute or more liberal rule under this act. Nor is an act done before the effective date of this act affected by the act’s enactment.

The amendment to this section is generally based upon Section 8-101 of the Uniform Probate Code and Section 1106 of the Uniform Trust Code.

[Section 16. Repeal; Conforming Amendments

[(a)]The [Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act] is repealed.]

[(b) . . .]

Legislative Note: A state should repeal its existing Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act, or comparable legislation, to be replaced by this act.

[A state should examine its statutes to determine whether conforming amendments are required by provisions of this act.]

Comment

This section repeals the adopting state’s present Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act. The effective date of this section should be the same date selected by the state in Section 12 for the application of this act.

Section 17. Effective Date

This [act] takes effect . . . .
