

SYMPOSIUM ON FEDERALISM AND STATE LAW

Friday, October 29, 2010

9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

George Washington University Law School
2000 H Street, N.W., Washington, DC

The Uniform Law Commission (ULC) and George Washington University Law School are co-sponsoring a Symposium on Federalism and State Law at the George Washington University Law School, in Washington, D.C., on Friday, October 29, 2010.

The Symposium is co-sponsored by a number other national organizations (including the Conference of Chief Justices, the National Center for State Courts, the National Governors' Association, the National Conference of State Legislatures, the Council of State Governments, and the National Association of Attorneys General). The general purpose of the Symposium is to explore the roles of the federal and state governments in areas of shared responsibility. One of the objectives is to begin a dialogue among representatives of federal, state and local governments, and other entities (such as ULC) that are interested in the intersection of and balance between state and federal regulation in areas of shared federal/state interest.

The Symposium will be attended by representatives from all levels of government, judges, academics, and representatives from organizations such as the ULC and the American Law Institute. . Senator Thomas Carper of Delaware will provide the luncheon keynote speech, drawing on his experience as both a Governor and a United States Senator to illustrate the challenges and opportunities for federalism that exist within contemporary times. Professor Daniel Farber of the University of California, Berkeley, School of Law, will open the symposium with an exploration of the history of federalism and discussion of the factors that have led to expansion or contraction of federal power and scope of federal legislation and regulation. A diverse group of panelists will provide broad range of expertise and perspectives on the issues introduced by Professor Farber. Panelists include current and former members of the Obama administration, state legislators, representatives of state and federal government agencies, academics, and practitioners experienced with the interplay of state and federal law. A copy of the program, containing information about the entire program and speakers, is enclosed.

We cordially invite you and members of your organization to attend this Symposium and participate in the discussion. There is no fee to attend, but we ask that you register on line as indicated at the top of the form or e-mail the attached registration form by October 15, 2010.
